The year of 1952 will also be a good time to reduce the mortgaged debt, economists say, and farmers who do will be in a better position to weather out any period of financial reverse, if one should occur.

Tests Reveal Lights Increase Egg Production

Although they don't have to see what they're doing, laying hens work better if they have lights, tests have revealed.

Lights extend the hen's working day. It makes it possible for each bird to eat more. But the main reason for larger egg production when lights are used is stimulation of the pituitary gland by light rays. Lights may be used profitably when the days are short.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here's why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Silent Speech

Seated next to each other, the two strangers remained silent as their train roared on mile after mile. Suddenly one of them, an old codger, turned to his neighbor and shouted, "Blast it! I know I'm getting deaf. You've been talking to me for half an hour and I haven't heard a word you said."

"Relax, mister," answered the other chap, "I've been chewing gum."

IT ISN'T TOO LATE!

If you still have last minute shopping to do, here's a suggestion you'll be grateful for. It's a simple solution—so easy to do and so sure to please. It's a solution that comes in two parts. First, give the Cigarette smokers on your list a carton or two of the cigarette that's by far America's favorite — cool, mild, flavorful Camels. The Camel Christmas carton is full of the Christmas spirit—bright and colorful and all ready to give. There's a space on the top reserved for your personal greeting. No wrapping, no fussing with paper or cards or ribbons. The second solution involves your pipe-smoking friends and the fellows who like to roll their own cigarettes. It's the one-pound tin of Prince Albert, America's largest-selling smoking tobacco. "The bite's out and the pleasure's in!" The pound tin of Prince Albert comes in a gay Christmas box, all ready to give—just put your message on the built-in Christmas card. Don't delay. Do it today. Your dealer still has Camel cartons and pound tins of Prince Albert. Pay him a visit! —Adv.

HOMER CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR: With detectives after them again, Jesse and Frank move back to Missouri and pick up their old life. There are more robberies, but the band is becoming harder to hold together. Jesse begins to fear that he might be killed for the reward which is offered for him. For the sake of some peace, Jesse moves his family to St. Joseph, Missouri, where they spend Christmas of 1881. Meanwhile, Bob Ford, whose brother Charlie is a member of the James gang, is becoming friendly with Dick Liddil, another member of the band. The two make a deal with Missouri's governor to murder Jesse and collect the $10,000 reward.

CHAPTER XIII

Then Jesse brought his fine friends in.

They had breakfast, then Bob went upstairs to bed in the room with the grim loopholes. Charlie slept in the same bed with Jesse in the big room downstairs. The bed is still there . . . it gives one a grisly feeling to look at it.

His mother, who was more astute as a reader of character, warned Jesse against Bob Ford. "I mistrust him," she said.

Jesse thought she was prejudiced. He knew more than she did about Bob Ford—wasn't Bob going to help him?

Premonition hung over his mother that all was not well, and some of her feeling must have been communicated to Jesse, for when the moment of parting came, he looked at the house where he had played as a child and said, "Mother, if I never see you here again, we'll meet in Heaven." He meant it, for his religion never deserted him.

The three left at night; the next morning they moved into a patch of timber. That evening they had supper at the farm of Jesse's half-sister, Sallie Samuels Nicholson, then started on again. The following night they stayed in a church eighteen miles from St. Joseph.

Jesse Realizes He Has Traitor in Home

Jesse's wife had been waiting for him in the lonely, forever fear-ridden House on the Hill. She was thunderstruck when she saw Jesse ride up with a new bandit. It was always happening—these terrible men who came so suddenly into her life.

He introduced the new man. He was a brother of Charlie's and was all right.

Time was moving along. Jesse decided on the bank at Platt City, Missouri, only a few miles from St. Joseph. A murder trial was in progress; the people would be in the courthouse. And he further decided to do something he had never done before: to kill the cashier whether or not he offered resistance. Cold-bloodedly he told Bob Ford to get him a butcher knife. When they got to the town, Bob was to hold the horses, Charlie was to guard the streets, and Jesse himself was to go in, seize the cashier, and cut his throat. It was horrible. It was a new and desperate Jesse.

In the meantime Dick Liddil, who had heard through Bob that if he turned state's evidence against Jesse he would be pardoned by Governor Crittenden, had surrendered. The news of his arrest had not been published; it was being suppressed until Jesse could be taken.

Then it came out anyway. Jesse was reading one of his newspapers when he ran across the startling news. Bob Ford was in the room at the time, and Jesse asked him casually, "By the way, Bob, where is Dick Liddil?"

"I don't know."

Jesse knew that Bob had Liddil's confidence; he realized now that he had a traitor in his home. Bob caught his look.

Bob at once became afraid to go on the bank expedition, for he believed that as soon as it was over Jesse would kill him. Later he said, "I think Jesse would have killed me, then and there, but he did not want to in front of his family."

After a few moments they began to talk about the robbery and how they would carry it out. It was Sunday; on Monday Bob Ford would buy the butcher knife and that afternoon they would ride toward Platte City. Monday night they would hide in the woods. Tuesday morning, when court was in session, the three would descend on the bank.

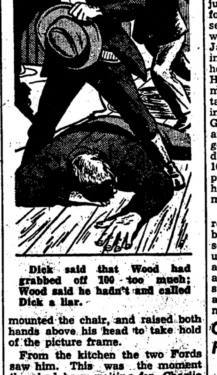
That night the three men sat around talking as if nothing had happened; finally Jesse went to bed, locking the door to his room. The house was peaceful and quiet. It was Sunday night.

The time was the first week in April. Sometimes, in this part of the Missouri River Valley, there is a kind of rehearsal of spring, and so there was this year, 1882. Monday morning was balmy and there was the lazy feel that comes with this first promise of summer.

Zee James served breakfast in the kitchen. Jesse and Charlie went to the stable and fed and curried the two horses, which had stood all night bridled and saddled. Bob remained with Jesse's wife, playing with the children.

The two came in from the stable, talking casually, Charlie stopped in the kitchen but Jesse walked on through to the front room, which faced on the street. In the room was a bed, really a cot.

On the wall was hanging the picture of a racehorse named 'Skyrocket'; picking up a featherduster, Jesse started toward it. "It's awfully hot today," he said, and taking off his coat and vest, tossed them on the bed. Then he opened the street door and started to mount the chair to dust the pictures. "If anybody passes they'll see me," he said, so he unstrapped the holster in which he carried two .45-caliber revolvers, one a Smith & Wesson, the other a Colt, and put it on the bed. Then he went back, mounted the chair, and raised both hands above his head to take hold of the picture frame.



Dick said that Wood had grabbed off 100 - too much; Wood said he hadn't and called Dick a liar.

From the kitchen the two Fords saw him. This was the moment they had been waiting for. Charlie winked at Bob, who casually strolled in and managed to place himself between Jesse and the bed. He was now behind Jesse. He drew his revolver and cocked it. Slight as the sound was, Jesse heard and started to turn to see what caused it. Bob was about five feet away; he extended his arm with the revolver in his hand until it was about three feet from Jesse. It was the revolver Jesse had given him.

Jesse was knocked forward by the impact but regained himself; he began to weave back and forth. Then he fell on the uncarpeted floor.

The two Fords stood over him a moment, each with a gun in hand, to make sure the deed had been accomplished. Then Bob seized his and Charlie's hat and the two ran out into the yard.

Zee came in and saw the body of her husband on the floor and the two men fleeing. "What have you done?" she screamed. "Bob, have you done this?" she cried in agonized tones.

Bob paused in his flight. "I swear to God I didn't."

"A pistol went off accidentally," explained Charlie.

Bob, Charlie Flee, Leave Jesse Dying

The two men leaped over the wooden fence and ran down the street as fast as they could, leaving her alone with Jesse.

She picked him up and held him in her arms. He tried to speak, but the effort was too great. The children came in, and at sight of their father began to scream. Leaving Jesse on the floor, she went to the kitchen and got a cloth and with it tried to wipe the blood away, but it was running too fast.

The two Fords hurried to the telegraph office and sent three telegrams announcing the good news. The first was to Governor Crittenden in Jefferson City, another was to the chief of police in Kansas City, and the third was to the sheriff of Clay County. Then they went to City Marshal Enos Craig's office to surrender, but found him gone, so they went to a deputy marshal, Frank M. Lovejoy, and gave themselves up. Soon they could collect the reward.

By this time the Ford brothers were tired and worn out from the morning's activities, so they were taken to the marshal's headquarters where they were given a hearty dinner.

The murder was a sensation. People were stunned. Would his friends come to reap vengeance on the killers? Was any home safe? Where was Frank James? What would he do?

The coroner, his inspection completed, notified Undertaker Sidenfaden, who came shortly after ten o'clock and bore the body away in a black hearse. Crowds followed it.

These who caught a glimpse of the dead Jesse saw a man of thirty-five with a pug nose and high cheekbones. The blue eyes, which had become larger and deeper-set with age, were now closed. He was neatly dressed, as he always was; in fact, according to the standards of the day, he was a dandy. His hair was black, but his beard was sandy - colored. It was neatly trimmed. Many, commenting on his appearance, said he looked like a doctor, for at this time is was a common practice for doctors to wear trimmed beards.

At the undertaker's the coroner ordered a medical inspection. It was revealed that Bob Ford's bullet had entered the head behind the right ear, had ranged upward, and had passed out over the left eye, near the temple, and on into the wall. The examination further revealed two old bullet holes in Jesse's right breast and one in the fleshy part of his right thigh—the only wounds he had ever received in the course of his nearly twenty years of guerrilla fighting and banditry.

Young James W. Graham had just gotten a job as photographer for a firm in St. Joseph. On the second day of his job, the startling word reached the studio that Jesse James had been killed. It seemed improbable, but he would see what he could get in the way of pictures. He obtained an order from the city marshal and went to the undertaker's. The coroner was still viewing the body. When he had finished, Graham went into the back room and set up his camera on a dry-goods box. He had a photographic dry plate in a studio camera, 8 x 10, but there was only a single plate-holder, for the double plate-holder had not yet come onto the market.

The body was carried into the room on a board, but it could not be photographed in that position, so the young photographer and the undertaker's assistant put a rope around the body, under the arms, and tied it to the board. They then stood the body as nearly upright as they could and the picture was made. It now is famous.

Coroner's Inquest Held in Shooting

When he was through, Graham started to the studio to develop the plate. People were so eager to get a picture of Jesse James that they followed him there and waited while the plate was developed and the prints made.

At three o'clock that afternoon the inquest testimony was begun in the old circuit courtroom in the courthouse. Two juries were prepared. There was a good deal of wrangling among politicians and petty officials, but finally one was selected, and the widow, who had left her children with a neighbor, was brought in. She was rather goodlooking, with blue eyes and brown hair and had a nice figure.

The Fords—armed—were brought in and placed opposite here. At sight of them, she began to weep. The coroner waited until she had possession of herself again, then began to question her. Here follows, in part, the official record as taken down in shorthand:

Question. What is your name?

Answer. Mrs. Jesse James.

Q. How long have you lived here?

A. Since the 9th of last November.

Q. How long have you lived at the place where your husband was killed?

A. Since Christmas Eve.

Q. Had he ever been wounded before?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whereabouts on the body?

A. On the right side. Two on the right side, I believe, and one in the leg.

Q. Where was he wounded at, what place and where?

A. Well, some time during the war. I don't know where.

Q. Was he disfigured any way?

A. No, sir, I believe not.

Q. In his hands, I mean, any wound?

A. Yes, sir, he had one finger shot off. I don't remember which one; it was some one of the middle fingers.

Q. How was his mail directed?

A. To Thomas Howard.

Q. Where was this mail from?

A. He never received any except from Nebraska. From an agent in regard to a place he wanted to get.

Q. What was the object in killing your husband?

A. I don't know, sir, unless it was for the reward, that is all I can think of.

Q. At the time your husband went to Nebraska, did these boys go along?

A. Charlie went.

The strain began to prove too much and the coroner, seeing how she was suffering, told her she could step down. She was helped out of the room by Marshal Enos Craig.

Bob Ford was brought to the witness stand. He entered it confidently, feeling certain of the sympathy of the crown. He was short, with blond hair and blue eyes, and wore a gray coat and vest and green-striped trousers.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

WHAT two words on human tongue are more heart-warming than those! They not only represent a friendly greeting, but in them are summed up the whole spirit of the Yuletide—brightness and laughter, joy of living and joy of giving, health and happiness, peace on earth and good will to all men.

It is a greeting which we will hear often in this community of ours during these happy days of the Christmas season. We will hear it on our streets, in our stores, along our country roads and in our homes. For ours is a friendly community and nowhere is that friendly greeting more sincere. It is not possible, however, for each of us to say "Merry Christmas!" to everyone and thus complete the happy circle of Yuletide good cheer.

But there is one who has that rare privilege, one who has been a welcome visitor at the firesides of the homes in this community throughout the year and who now claims the right to be the first to wish you joy at this joyous time. That one is your Home Paper.

So your Home Paper carries from you to all the community and from all the community to you this friendly greeting:

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

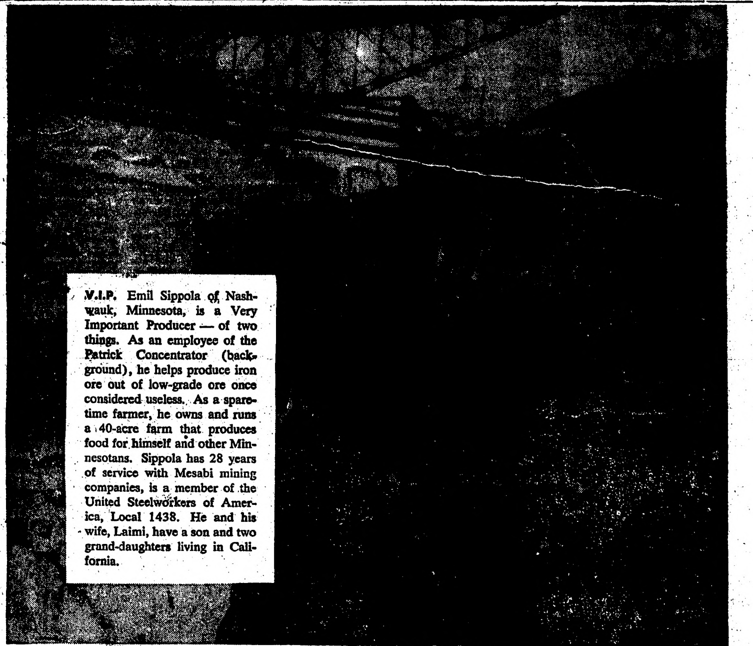
A group of girls were out Caroling Monday evening.



V.I.P. Emil Sippola of Nashwauk, Minnesota, is a Very Important Producer — of two things. As an employee of the Patrick Concentrator (background), he helps produce iron ore out of low-grade ore once considered useless. As a spare-time farmer, he owns and runs a 40-acre farm that produces food for himself and other Minnesotans. Sippola has 28 years of service with Mesabi mining companies, is a member of the United Steelworkers of America, Local 1438. He and his wife, Laimi, have a son and two grand-daughters living in California.

Ever seen an iron ore factory?

You can see one now, just behind Mr. Sippola. That big, businesslike plant is actually a factory that makes good iron ore out of material no old-time miner would have looked at twice.

Entering this plant each year are 3 million tons of ore that looks like sand and rock—ore containing only 39% iron. Leaving it—after extensive treatment—are 1 million tons of ore with the highly respectable iron content of 57%.

Floating Rock

Ore processing of this sort is a big job, a tough one, a dramatic one to watch. Rocks are pounded to pieces in great crushers. Water—millions of gallons of it—launders the ore, washing away the sand. Much of the ore cannot be treated in this way — it goes through other machines such as "heavy density" separators that actually float off the waste rock.

Remarkable as this plant would look to you, you would be more impressed at the number of them that have been built in recent years across Minnesota's Mesabi and Cuyuna ranges. Over 50 such concentrating plants are now in operation in the State.

Minnesota Gains

And, much as these plants mean to America—with defense needs constantly soaring—they mean still more to Minnesota.

These plants mean jobs—steady jobs for thousands of men like Emil Sippola. They mean conservation of a great Minnesota resource—for, as the leaner ores are used, the life of the high grade ores still remaining can be greatly stretched. They mean good business for all the State—for people who sell materials and supplies to the companies, and food, clothing and household appliances to the employees.

More Ore Factories?

In the near future another kind of ore factory may join the concentrating plants in Minnesota's iron country—factories to make iron ore out of the even leaner, even more abundant rock called taconite. In fact, one experimental taconite plant is already in operation and two more are being built.

Bigger commercial - scale taconite plants are coming—along with continuing benefits for all Minnesota. The ore producers are anxious to maintain operations to insure the future of mining in this State.

STOCKHOLDERS VOTE PLANT SETTLEMENT

Drive to Sell More Stock in Locker Plant to Be Made to Settle Equipment Account

A special meeting of the stockholders of the Marshall County Co-operative Locker Association of Newfolden, Strandquist and Holt was held last Thursday at Newfolden to decide what to do with the bill of the Allied Equipment Co.

President Oscar Rokke presided over the meeting, and after the pros and cons of the controvery had been heard, the stockholders voted to settle the claim of the equipment company at a liberal cut.

The freezing equipment in the Strandquist and Holt Plant have never been satisfactory, and as a result the Board of Directors have refused settlement.

President Rokke was down to Minneapolis last week for a conference with the Allied Equipment Co. officials and also for another one with officers of the Bank for Co-operatives.

Additional stock in the locker plant will be sold and everyone at the meeting signed up for stock. If every stockholder in the community will buy a little extra stock, the account can be settled easily.

Eyes on Farm

For farm people who need glasses, observe the following tips: Get sturdy frames with bows over the ears for support. Ask for dark plastic frames if you work outdoors most of the time. Get gold frames for excellent service. Procure shatter-prof lenses if your work is liable to bring your eyeglasses into contact with flying objects or particles; and, if you do get such lenses, have a lighter, thinner pair for your "dress" glasses.

January Inventory Sales Offer Housewives Attractive Bargains

In the next few days Main Street merchants will begin the tedious job of inventory of stocks. Shortly afterwards, your local newspaper will carry announcements of January and first of the year sales. The home town housewife who studies the advertisements and is willing to spend a little time in shopping will find numerous bargains.

From the merchants point of view, this first of the year promotion is designed to clear space in his store for spring merchandise. By selling it at cost, and sometimes less, he reduces his inventory and secures capital to reinvest in spring and summer goods.

True, some of the merchandise he will advertise may be damaged by handling, but generally it is as good as when he received it into his store. The most serious difficulty he may encounter is the lack of assorted sizes, colors and styles.

But by careful shopping and studying the advertisements in the home town newspaper, the housewife can find savings of as much as 50 per cent.

This is also a good time for the housewife to invest that Christmas present of cash in new drapes and household furnishings. These lines, as well as apparel, will go on sale in thousands of Main Street stores across the country.

BARGAINS Galore!

One last hint to the bargain hunting housewife: look for the label, brand names that you know from past experience are quality. If the garment's label says 100 per cent virgin wool then you know its quality. If it doesn't, then keep looking until you find what you want.

1952 Will Be Designated 'See America First' Year

Home towners across the nation are going to be seeing a lot of the slogan "See America First" during 1952. It is the official slogan of the Hotel Greeters of America and the American Hotel Association. The home town that has a tourist attraction and will participate in the program will find a lot of outside dollars floating around the community.

Ninety million Americans with vacations on their minds will be moving about by train, plane, bus, auto, bike and on foot, to get better acquainted with their native land during the year. The community with an attraction worth seeing should start now to sell that attraction to the tourists of his state and the nation.

Jingling in the pockets of these 90 million tourists will be something like 15 billion dollars. Some of it will be spent for lobsters in Maine, hot dogs at Coney Island, shrimp in Mississippi, steaks in Chicago, chow mein in San Francisco and barbecue in Texas. Everyone, everywhere, is going to benefit by this great pilgrimage to see America. There is no reason why your home town should not also.

More than 30 city and state hotel associations have joined in the promotion and will use the slogan "See America First" in all their publicity and advertising activities.

Backing the Hotel Greeters and other hotel associations are many of the transportation companies, proclaiming America's transportation system to be ready and the best in the world. Hotel and resort operators offer the finest accommodations and services available in the world. And publications allied to the hotel and travel field will report and extol the "See America First" story.

Louis Rangno of Los Angeles, director of the promotion, had this to say of the project: "Nation-wide promotion of the slogan 'See America First' is not meant solely to discourage foreign travel. Rather it is to serve as a reminder to the general public, hotel, resort, transportation and allied fields that to 'know America is to live America.' Everything that can be done along educational and promotional lines to stimulate the desire to travel in America increases the general welfare of all concerned in the activity."

The American Hotel Association, speaking for its 6,000 members, said the industry will do everything it can to help the traveler on his journey across the nation. The group reported hotel accommodations today are priced for every purse. The freedom to travel is for all, the rich, the not-so-rich, the white collar worker, the laborer, and the student.

A man could travel every day of his life in the United States and every day see something wonderful. So, this promotion will better acquaint the public with the many points of scenic and historic distinction with which America abounds. And it will serve notice to the world that the right to move about freely is an American freedom, a personal freedom not to be denied.

Watch for the slogan "See America First" during the coming months and find out if your town is participating.

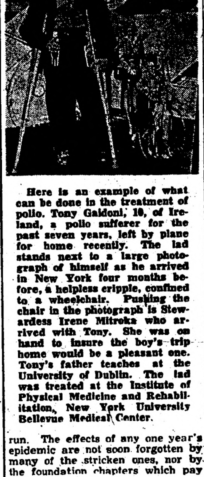
Local Dimes March Starts January 2

The campaign for polio-fighting funds will get under way in thousands of home towns of the nation on January 2. The March of Dimes campaign period has been doubled because the National Foundation has been forced into debt four years in succession by surging polio incidence.

During the last four years, the foundation and its chapters have spent $79,000,000 in March of Dimes funds for patient care charges alone, as compared with $41,000,000 in the previous ten-year span.

This situation was brought about not only by rising costs but also because there were more cases during the last four years than in the entire previous decade.

Added to increased costs and increased incidence has been a third factor that has compounded the difficulties of the National Foundation. Polio doesn't just hit and run. The effects of any one year's epidemic are not soon forgotten by many of the stricken ones, nor by the foundation chapters which pay the bills.



Here is an example of what can be done in the treatment of polio. Tony Gaidoni, 10, of Ireland, a polio sufferer for the past seven years, left by plane for home recently. The lad stands next to a large photograph of himself as he arrived in New York four months before, a helpless cripple, confined to a wheelchair. Pushing the chair in the photograph is Stewardess Irene Mitroka who arrived with Tony. She was on hand to insure the boy's trip home would be a pleasant one. Tony's father teaches at the University of Dublin. The lad was treated at the Institute of Physical Medicine and Rehabilitation, New York University Bellevue Medical Center.

In 1951, for example, the March of Dimes organization provided care for 45,000 men, women and children stricken in prior years—in addition to the four out of five of the new patients who needed help.

This black picture has meant that the National Foundation is annually faced with an average of 30,000 cases, in contrast to the 10 to 12 thousand cases a year formerly considered "normal."

Odessa Conducts Antipolio Cleanup

Odessa, Texas, where the invisible enemy polio has stricken 62 persons and taken nine lives this year, turned out in force with rakes and disinfectant recently to clean up the town. Bankers, lawyers, clergymen, and doctors were among the thousands who put on work clothes. Both banks and many business houses closed. Other firms operated with skeleton crews of women.

A clothier gave work gloves, a grocery donated rakes and shovels, neighboring towns sent 120 trucks and drivers, and oil companies provided mobile units to spray alleys with live steam.

The community had 50 polio cases during November and December. Also, 43 cases of infant diarrhea prompted the cleanup.

When the day was done 506 truckloads of trash had been hauled to a special dump and burned. Housewives served workers hot coffee.

Capehart Amendment Allows Price Increases on Thousands of Items

HERE WE GO—With a sigh of "here we go again", home town housewives across the nation learned the Capehart amendment to the controls law is effective immediately. The amendment opens the way for possible price increases on thousands of consumer items, including clothing, meat, foods, milk, butter, coal, gasoline, tobacco, beer, drugs and cosmetics.

Under this amendment manufacturers and processors are allowed to use their pre-Korea prices and add or subtract cost inceases or decreases through last July 26 in computing new ceilings. Because application of the Capehart formula is optional, the general effect of the new order could not be adequately estimated. However, it was believed the particular effect will be to raise prices whenever an application for adjustment is granted.

There is just one possible hope for the consumer. Manufacturers are not required to seek new ceilings, but are allowed to do so. If any concern seeks higher prices for any line of goods, any reductions required by the formula for other goods must be put into effect as well. The firm cannot seek higher prices alone.

Among the items affected by the new order are wool and cotton yarns and fabrics, soft drinks, liquor and wine, lumber and millwork, crude oil, canned and frozen fruits and vegetables, and many other processed foods, also many important chemicals, plastics, insecticides.

Price Director Michael V. Di Salle has warned congress that prices apparently are rising again and it would be a dangerous risk to decontrol any major item now.

MARCH OF DIMES
FIGHT INFANTILE PARALYSIS
JANUARY 2-31

FOOD PRICES—While the OPS was announcing possible future price increases, the Bureau of Labor Statistics revealed that its latest index on food prices indicated an increase of nearly 1 per cent since its previous report.

The bureau pegged the price index at 231.2. That placed it 131.2 per cent above the 1935-39 average and 14 per cent above June, 1950.

Leading the advance were fruits and vegetables, and dairy products, including milk, cheese and butter. Meats, poultry and fish declined, as did fats and oils.

TRUCE TALKS—The drawn-out, frustrating Korean peace talks continue with the two sides deadlocked over supervision of the truce and the Reds refusing to open discussions on the exchange of prisoners.

Perhaps the most significant news from the truce talks is that the negotiations have entered the sixth month. It is almost inconceivable that two parties can talk for five months without agreement if there was good faith and a desire for peace on the part of all concerned. This fact alone has made the people in the home town of America pessimistic of the outcome.

By the time this reaches print the December 27 deadline on the provisional cease-fire line will have expired. If an armistice has not been agreed on, then a new cease fire line must be drawn before a final settlement. For this reason (since it appears unlikely an agreement will be reached) increased fighting can be expected on the battlefront as both sides attempt to improve their positions.

TRUMAN—President Truman cut short his Florida vacation and returned to Washington. The President hastened to assure the public that no sudden world emergency dictated his return.

It was obvious two things were uppermost in the President's mind: (1) The deadlocked Korean truce talks, and (2) the still-developing tax scandals.

It was considered unlikely there would be any public announcement concerning decisions about the Korean situation until those decisios had been carried out. The tax scandal, however, was another matter.

The President and those surrounding him have become more and more concerned with the developments (see below) in the tax fix probe. White House intervention, even the calling in of J. Edgar Hoover, FBI chief, to conduct a sweeping investigation, appeared to be a likely prospect.

MRS. F.D.R.—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, one of the most controversial figures to appear on the American scene, came under attack of Archbishop J. Francis A. McIntyre for "assuming the role of an agnostic and fatalist".

Mrs. Roosevelt said on a radio program recently: "I don't know whether I believe in a future life . . . I came to feel that it didn't really matter very much because whatever the future held you'd have to face it when you came to it, just as whatever life holds you have to face it in exactly the same way.

"I think I am pretty much of a fatalist. You have to accept whatever comes, and the only important thing is that you meet it with courage and with the best that you have to give."

The archbishop said he considers it "a strange situation that one who is chairman of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, on the question of religion, assume the role of an agnostic and fatalist."

DEFENSE—Secretary of Defense Robert A. Lovett has announced that a provision for increasing the Air Force from 90 to 143 wings—126 of them combat—will be in the 1953 fiscal year budget now being prepared and which will be presented to congress early next month.

The actual size of the defense budget has not been announced, but it is believed to be within an informally set ceiling of $45,000,000,000 for the entire military establishment.

Congress appropriated a total of $59,403,264,000 for the Army, Navy, Air Force and the Office of the Secretary of Defense for the present fiscal year, exclusive of foreign military aid.

The present 90 wings of the Air Force—their size varies from about 75 planes for fighter units to 30 for heavy bombers—are not modernized since they are in many instances made up of aircraft such as the B-29 and B-50. These planes are World War II vintage and must be replaced.

TAX FIX—The House Ways and Means subcommittee graft in the Revenue Department was blown wide open by the charge of Abraham Teitelbaum that two men claiming friendship with federal officials tried to shake him down for $500,000 with promises of a "tax fix".

ABRAHAM TEITELBAUM

Teitelbaum, a wealthy Chicago lawyer, further identified as attorney for the Capone family in some of their legal troubles, swore that Bert K. Naster, Hollywood, Fla., businessman, and Frank Nathan, Pittsburgh, led him to believe that they knew of a Washington clique which was on the lookout for "soft touches".

Naster and Nathan both vigorously denied the charge, but Attorney General Howard McGrath ordered a grand jury investigation of charges.

As far as the people in the home towns are concerned, the charges and denials continue to throw a darker shadow across the Internal Revenue Bureau, under fire since the dismissal of Assistant Attorney General Theron Caudle by President Truman. And the deeper the investigating committee digs the more dirt that is likely to be uncovered. There is no doubt now that the echo of this investigation will be heard in the election campaign of 1952.

Out of Date

The textbooks used in his schools were hopelessly out of date but Mr. Smithers, the superintendent of education, could not be persuaded that they should be replaced by more modern ones. That is—until one night when Mr. Smithers telephoned his assistant and exclaimed excitedly: "Call a meeting of the board right away. We must have up-to-date books—and immediately!"

"What convinced you our present ones are out of date?" his assistant wanted to know.

"A problem my boy read out of his arithmetic book," Smithers snarled. "It begins: 'If a plumber gets three dollars a day—'"

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE—NOT GOOD FOOD
Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!
Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes only waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, worn-out feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Sticking Waffles

QUESTION: Could you tell me what to do with the grids of my waffle-iron? The waffles stick to it every time. The iron is about nine months old and up until just a couple of weeks ago it worked fine, but now the batter sticks on both top and bottom grids. I followed the directions that come with it as to what to do in such a case exactly as directed but it didn't help a bit. Also, could you tell me how to clean the black from the grids?

ANSWER: I believe that if you would be more liberal with the shortening in the batter you would not have so much trouble. Although you did not say that your waffle-iron is an electric one, I presume it is. For some reason the directions given for making waffles appear to be a bit stingy about the shortening. If you would double the usual amount (or almost double it) I feel sure you would have better success. You can clean off hardened batter with a clean, stiff brush, either fibre or soft wire. You might have the iron cleaned up at an electric appliance shop. If that cannot be done, you can clean it at home by covering the iron with a paste of baking soda moistened with water and allowed to dry. This will remove much of the discoloration. Before using again, however, it should be brushed with a vegetable oil and heated, which is the same treatment given to a new waffle-iron.

HOMER CROY'S JESSE JAMES WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR:

Fate is closing in on Jesse. Bob Ford and Dick Liddil make a deal with the governor to kill Jesse; then Bob joins Jesse's band. Now Bob and his brother Charlie, also in the gang, are plotting against Jesse. The time is April, 1882. Jesse discovers Bob's tie-up with Dick Liddil and Bob knows he is suspected, so he decides to act swiftly. It is on a Sunday morning, early in April, that Bob Ford, backed up by Charlie, shoots Jesse in cold blood after Jesse takes off his guns to dust off a picture. Bob and Charlie flee, and Jesse dies in the arms of his wife. Bob and Charlie surrender themselves to a deputy U.S. marshall. An inquest is held.

CHAPTER XIV

While Ford was on the stand, two telegrams addressed to him were received. One was from the commissioner of police in Kansas City—his old underwear friend. It bubbled over with enthusiasm: "Will come on the first train. Hurrah for you."

The second was from the chief of police in Kansas City: "What time did you get him, and where?"

The crowd had had time to study Ford and now seemed to realize what a traitorous thing he had done, and as he withdrew from the witness stand there were mutterings of disapproval.

Crowds stood all night in the streets, talking and looking at the undertaker's. At seven in the morning of April 6th, a pine box was wheeled out and put into a two-horse spring-wagon and started for the depot, the crowd walking along with the wagon.

Jesse's mother, wife, and children arrived by carriage; instantly the crowd surged out. While attention was directed to them, a man with a knife in his hand rushed up to the pine box and began to whittle off souvenirs.

Jesse's Body Taken To Missouri Home

The box was put in the express car. Jesse's family got on, along with some police officials who had suddenly become extremely attentive, having seen which way sentiment was blowing. The train, without the usual call 'All aboard.' drew silently out.

At Cameron Junction, Missouri, a change of train had to be made, and again Jesse's mother watched the pine box wheeled sadly out. About ten o'clock that morning the funeral train reached Kearney, and the coffin was carried to the Kearney House, where the lid was opened. The body lay in what might be called 'state.' So great was the interest that the passing trains—both freight and passenger—stopped for twenty minutes to allow passengers and crews to see Jesse. The hotel was about a block from the depot, so that they could view the body and get back within the time. Almost since dawn farmers had been arriving, and now men who had gone to school with Jesse—old friends and neighbors—marched steadily past, looking down at the bearded face.

Mrs. Samuels, with the widow and children, had been driven to the old farm. A reporter followed, and she said to him from the depth of her feeling: "I am proud of my children. I am proud to be the mother of Jesse James. He was generous to the needy and he was never a traitor. Two of my sons have been murdered—one in this house—and another lies at the point of death. Thank God, Frank is beyond their reach! They can't shoot him in the back."

At a quarter past two the coffin was taken out of the hotel and carried down the street to the church where Jesse had been converted sixteen years before. The casket was placed on wooden supports in front of the pulpit. Jesse's mother and family sat near it. An out-of-town pastor assisted; when he began to pray a fresh burst of tears came from Jesse's mother, and she repeated over and over, "Oh God! Oh God!" The minister of the church conducted the services, choosing ironically as his text, "Therefore, be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."

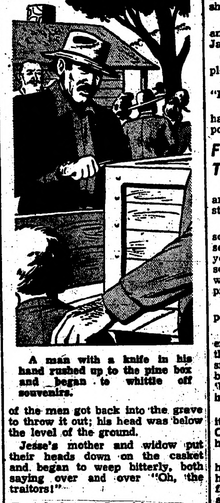
After the first few words the minister made no further reference to the dead man. The sermon was stilted and advised the congregation to 'prepare to meet thy God,' as was the custom of the time. At the end he requested the audience not to go to the grave, saying that Mrs. Samuels' son was seriously ill and the excitement of seeing so many people might be too much for him.

But many people who could not get in the church had already started for the house. They did not hear the request.

The pine box was loaded into a four-horse wagon. The roads were rutted from the recent rains and from the unusual amount of driving back and forth to the James farm, and the casket began to slide back and forth. A boy named Cale C. Henson, the brother of the driver, was put in the wagon to keep the box from sliding around. When a rut came he braced his feet and hands, but sometimes the load was too much and the box knocked against the sides of the wagonbed.

The wagon turned in at the James gate and went up the winding road that Jesse had galloped over so many times. The box was opened and the lid of the coffin pulled back; then friends and neighbors carried it into the house. John Samuels was propped up in bed. It was a pitiful scene. Mrs. Samuels wept louder and more distractedly than ever, saying, "John, here is your poor brother they killed."

Now the casket was carried to the grave. Neighbors had dug it in the yard under the edge of the coffee-bean tree where Dr. Samuels had been hanged by the Federal soldiers. Because Mrs. Samuels was afraid of vandals she had ordered the grave to be dug seven feet deep. Some dirt had fallen in, and one of the men got back into the grave to throw it out; his head was below the level of the ground.



A man with a knife in his hand rushed up to the pine box and began to whittle off souvenirs.

Jesse's mother and widow put their heads down on the casket and began to weep bitterly, both saying over and over "Oh, the traitors!"

Frank James Decides To Give Himself Up

From the moment of Jesse's death people had asked, "Where is Frank? Will he kill Bob Ford? Will he organize a new gang?" There had been wild rumors that he had come to the undertaker's parlor, that he had attended the funeral in disguise. The newspapers sprouted headlines: he had been seen here, he had turned up there; he was everywhere. Actually, he was in Baltimore.

His wife saw the news in a Baltimore paper and handed it to him. Frank read it and said, "I think this time it's true. I think they've got Jesse."

He wanted to see his mother and try to comfort her, but this was too dangerous, with the whole country looking for him, so he did not come back to Missouri.

The summer went by and so did a thousand rumors. When would Frank strike?

Fall came. The governor of Missouri got a letter asking whether, if Frank James came in, he would be given protection and a fair trial. The governor wrote to the go-between (who was Frank R. O'Neil, a reporter on the St. Louis Republican) that Frank would be assured a fair trial, but, if found guilty, would have to pay the penalty.

Frank's wife went to see the governor and extended the plea.

Six months had passed since that fateful day in St. Joseph before Frank really did start back. He went to an old guerrilla friend near Lee's Summit, Missouri. Seventeen years since the end of the Civil War, but the Missouri Bushwhackers still hung together. There was something fine about it, the loyalty the old fighters had for each other. There he stayed overnight. What stories must have been retold . . . what adventures relived!

The next morning Frank and his friend went to the depot; they shook hands and Frank mounted the steps of the train. No one knew that one of the famous men of America was entering the ancient car.

At Sedalia, Major John N. Edwards got on. The two arrived in Jefferson City at one o'clock in the morning, went to the hotel, and there registered as John N. Edwards and B. F. Winfrey, the night clerk never realizing that a bit of history was being made under his eyes. They slept in the same bed; next morning they had a leisurely breakfast, for Frank knew that from now on his breakfasts would be entirely different. They went out for a stroll. Everybody knew Edwards; he introduced the tall, silent, bearded Mr. Winfrey. The people hardly glanced at him . . . they wanted to talk to the famous newspaperman instead.

At noon the two went back to their room, where Mr. Winfrey lay down and slept. Then, at five that afternoon, they walked down the street and turned into the capitol building and went to Governor Crittenden's office. Half a dozen political catcalls were waiting in the reception room. They hopped to their feet and palavered with Mr. Edwards.

Mr. Winfrey went to a vacant chair and sat down alone, no one noticing him.

When the secretary announced that Mr. Edwards and his friend could now see the governor, the two went in. Seated with Crittenden were some state officials and political odds-and-ends. They were pleased to see Mr. Edwards. Mr. Edwards plowed through them and shook hands with the governor.

"Governor, allow me to introduce an old friend of mine, Frank James."

The political odds-and-ends smiled pleasantly.

Crittenden extended his hand. "I'm glad to meet you, Mr. James."

And now the politicos stared very hard. Was this some kind of hocus-pocus?

Frank Hands Gun To Missouri Governor

Frank reached under his coat and took a six-shooter out of a holster. He extended it butt-first.

"I want to hand over to you something that no man except myself has touched in twenty-one years. I've taken the cartridges out so you can handle it safely." There was a glint of humor in his expression.

The eyes of the hangers-on popped.

Frank showed a well-worn leather belt studded with cartridges. In the middle of the belt, arranged to snap the ends together, was a big bronze buckle in the form of a 'U. S.' The governor looked at it in surprise.

"Yes, that's a Union belt. I got it off a dead Federal soldier in Centralia, Missouri. We had killed him."

Now that the State of Missouri had him, what was it going to do with him? To the governor's chagrin he found there wasn't a specific charge against Frank James. He had offered a reward for Frank, but the courts had to have a charge before they could proceed. At last somebody remembered there was some kind of charge against him, not in Jefferson City but in Independence, Missouri. After a great deal of bother, Frank was kept overnight, then the next day put on the train and started for Independence. Meantime the newspapers had it. It was a sensation of the day — Frank James had come in.

People flocked to the train as if he were a President. He had to appear on the back platform and wave.

When he got to Independence his mother was there in the station waiting, and so were his wife and their son Robbie, and his wife's father and mother. Mrs. Samuels threw her handless arm around his neck. "Buck! Buck!" she cried. "Home at last. They can't do anything to you. Oh Buck!"

The charge the authorities thought they could support was the murder of the Pinkerton detective Witcher, but when they examined the evidence carefully they realized it could be seen through as easily as a bride's veil. After a great deal of confabulating, they decided to switch the charge and try him for the murder of the railroad man who had been killed in the Winston robbery about a year and a half before. A man named McMillan.

Preparations lasted until the following August (Frank had surrendered October 5, 1882). There must be no slip-up. Frank James would have to pay. But what the prosecution hadn't counted on was the way popular opinion was running in Frank's favor. More and more it was realized how dastardly had been the killing of Jesse. Frank must be given a fair deal; no legal shooting in the back. Feeling against the banks and railroads and express companies had not slacked off; and the Pinkertons were rat poison. The James Boys had done a great deal of good; on everybody's lips was the song of how they had robbed the rich and given to the poor.

Frank was to be tried in the famous old courthouse at Gallatin, a few jumps from the Croy home. The courtyard began filling almost at dawn, and when the door to the courtroom was opened, grim armed men rushed in and plunked themselves down on the long wooden benches that served for seats. More and more came, all to see Frank and defend him. The judge, alarmed by what he saw, announced that court was adjourned and would be resumed again at the opera house. He further announced that admittance would be by ticket and that the tickets would be supplied by the sheriff of the county.

Farm Scrap Harvest Reported a Success

Farmers Can Sell All Scrap Iron and Steel

The national farm scrap harvest conducted between October 15 and November 15 has been termed a success by the steel industry, producing millions of tons of scrap iron and steel badly needed for making new steel.

Although the drive is over, farmers should continue to collect the scrapped machinery about their farms and sell it to dealers. It is a good way to keep the farm premises cleaned up and, although scrap does not sell for big prices, the financial return does mean something.

Steel is 50% SCRAP
Your Country Needs It Now!

The steel industry continues to need the broken tractor parts, rusted and worn out implements, plow points, outdated horse drawn equipment, old cultivators, broken shovels and similar equipment that can be found on almost every American farm. There are about 25 tons of iron and steel on the average farm.

Farm scrap can be a major source of the 36,000,000 tons of scrap that are needed by the steel mills this year. It takes that much scrap to produce 110,000,000 tons of steel that mills in our country have as their goal for 1951.

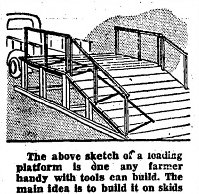
Cheaper Way to Fatten Beef Cattle Outlined

G. A. Branaman, Michigan State College animal husbandry authority, reports that full feeding grain is the quickest way to get a steer to market, but it isn't necessarily the cheapest or the most profitable.

Plain cattle, for instance should be fed longer and more cheaply than well-bred steers of good type. "Corn silage full-fed along with protein supplement may replace all the grain for plain steers when fed a longer time," he comments. "Yearling steers usually are fed from 4 to 7 months, depending on their grade and quality, and the amount of grain fed. Calves require a longer time to fatten and 2-year-olds a shorter time.

Wintering calves on roughage, then pasturing for part or all of the summer without grain results in cheap gains. Under present cattle and feed prices it is possible to pasture cattle for two summers, feeding roughage in winter. These animals may be grain fed for a short time or sold as grass-fat cattle.

Loading Platform



The above sketch of a loading platform is one any farmer handy with tools can build. The main idea is to build it on skids so it can be moved about the farm as desired. The railing can be made detachable to make it easier for loading farm machinery. The uprights would require 4x4 lumber and the platform 2" planks.

Shearing Lamb Faces Will Increase Gains

Shearing the faces of heavily-wooled feeder lambs will increase gains, according to Graydon Blank, extension animal husbandry specialist at Michigan State College.

Blank explained that lambs can see better without a heavy crop of wool around their eyes. After shearing they'll find the feed trough more quickly, will eat better and will gain much more rapidly, specialists report.

Otter Tales
By ... Reddy Kilowatt
A monthly column of news and information published by Otter Tail Power Company, Fergus Falls, Minnesota

This is the time of year when you start adding things up in your head to see what kind of progress you've made during the past twelve months. And it's the same way with the Otter Tail folks -- around Christmas they always ask me to paint a little word picture of how they've done in improving service and in bringing more electricity to more people. And you can take it from your friend, Reddy, the picture looks all right.

Otter Tail crews were busy building new and rebuilding old transmission lines -- more than 400 miles of it. Over $1,200,000 went into improving distribution systems in towns in the Otter Tail service territory. Work progressed rapidly on the new 115,000 volt transmission network, and 20,000 KVA of additional transformer capacity was installed around the system. A new office building was built at Hallock, and 3,500 people visited the grand opening of the three and a half million dollar, 15,000 kilowatt plant in Ortonville.

These are the highlights: They account for only a portion of the nearly two million hours Otter Tail employees worked during the year to provide you with the comforts of electric living. We'll be working just as hard to serve you in 1952, with time out now just to say --

Bigger Corn Goals Heighten Need For Plant Food in '52

WITH 1952 corn planting goals reported at 88 million acres, Midwestern farmers will be asked to produce big yields again next year, points out the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

Prospective 1952 goals will be about 3½ million acres more than the corn acreage harvested this year, says the committee.

"Getting big corn yields per acre," it says, "is a matter of following good soil management practices that increase the plant nutrient and organic matter supply.

"Soils specialists estimate that farmers in many states could double their present corn output.

"Where soils already have good tilth, the generous use of nitrogen, phosphate and potash can give immediate yield increases. This is particularly true if a starter fertilizer at planting time is reinforced by a backlog of nutrients in the soil.

Well-fed corn yields extra bushels.

"Other soils may need to be conditioned for high yields by building up the organic matter supply with a well-fertilized legume-grass crop.

"When taprooted legumes such as alfalfa and sweet clover are well fed with phosphate and potash, they condition the soil all the way down through the root zone and enable corn to make the most efficient use of plant nutrients and moisture in the soil. The active organic matter added by the legumes supplies energy material for the billions of tiny organisms below the surface that fix nitrogen in the soil, fight plant diseases and release carbon dioxide for the use of crops."

Would mean the world to me.

Eyes on Farm

For farm people who need glasses, observe the following tips: Get sturdy frames with bows over the ears for support. Ask for dark plastic frames if you work outdoors most of the time. Get gold frames for excellent service. Procure shatter-prof lenses if your work is liable to bring your eyeglasses into contact with flying objects or particles; and, if you do get such lenses, have a lighter, thinner pair for your "dress" glasses.

Judge Thomas F. Murphy to Direct Administration's House Cleaning

SCANDAL—Thomas F. Murphy, a New York federal judge, will direct President Truman's non-partisan commission which will attempt to clean up the present administration before the coming election campaign. Murphy is an old hand at investigations. He formerly directed the criminal section of the U. S. attorney's office in New York and prior to being elevated to the bench, served for a time as commissioner of New York's huge police force.

As things now stand, the President is taking personal charge of the cleanup campaign. However, administration critics, as well as some of its supporters, believe that corruption in government as revealed in the past few years has ruined the Democratic party's chance of re-election.

The postwar rash of investigations started when evidence of skullduggery was revealed in the disposal of surplus war poperty. Almost immediately afterwards a probe was stated of "five-percenters"—men who peddled influence and obtained juicy government contracts for a fee. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was next in the headlines for financing loans. This resulted in a shakeup in the agency and the naming of a single new administrator, W. Stuart Symington. Even Democratic National Chairman William J. Boyle figured in the probe and resigned as a result.

The R.F.C. scandal was still making news when the special congressional tax investigating committee plowed into the Bureau of Internal Revenue, resulting in sensational disclosures of "tax fixing" and influence peddling.

It was evident the President had this sordid history in mind when he announced he planned to establish a special house-cleaning agency, and that wrongdoers will be ousted "no matter who they are or how big they are."

The President's action, however, is not likely to lessen the criticism of his administration. To the contrary, it could mean a fresh wave of embarrassing exposures, particularly if the probe is pushed as vigorously as the President says he intends. And if the probers show any signs of heel-dragging, there will be plenty of Republicans ready to prod them along.

It would seem, then, that the people in the home towns of America can expect further disclosures of corruption in government, perhaps more sensational than already revealed during the past few years. One GOP strategist has summed up the situation pretty well: "If this thing really gets rolling, it could make Teapot Dome look like a tea party."

TRUCE TALKS—The Korean peace talks hit a snag of vital importance and interest to home towners who have relatives fighting in Korea—the exchange of prisoners. The Communists refused to list the prisoners, or even to say how many they held. Until they do, the UN has refused to talk on the subject of prisoner exchange.

It may be the Communists will change their tactics and produce the prisoner list before this reaches print. If they do, the UN will then be concerned about the location of the camp and the exchange method.

There are 11,000 Americans and 1,500 British and other UN troops missing in Korea. Under the head of "allied missing" (but not UN) are about 89,000 South Koreans. UN forces hold 165,000 of the enemy, of whom 18,000 are Chinese.

When the prisoners are exchanged, and they must be before there is any final peace in Korea, less than 4,000 can be expected to return, UN officials believe. One UN report recently estimated that nearly 8,000 UN soldiers have died of wounds or atrocities. This would support the general figure of less than 4,000 still being alive.

THE BUDGET—Within the next few weeks the people in the small towns of the nation will hear what the government expects to spend during the fiscal year beginning July 1. The budget is about ready for formal presentation to congress.

Advance reports indicated it may be about $83,000,000,000, although President Truman has spent considerable time trying to prune it below $80 billion on advice of political aides.

Even an $80,000,000,000 outlay would be the biggest in history, except for the two peak years of World War II, when spending passed $95,000,000,000. The spending this fiscal year, which will end next June 30, is expected to be about $70,000,000,000.

A number of factors directed the President's pruning attempts: (1) Military spending must be kept within bounds to retain public support; (2) This year is a presidential campaign year and federal spending, deficits and indebtedness will be an issue; (3) Prospects for a new tax increase to match the rising budget are very dim; (4) Never before have taxes been as high as now.

CEILINGS CUT—Price ceilings on cattle hides, calfskins, carpetings, and rugs have been rolled back by the government. The roll-back amounted to 5 cents a pound on cattle hide and 18 per cent (10 to 15 cents a pound) on calfskin.

The reduction in hide ceiling is not expected to have any effect on the market price of leather or on shoes and other goods made of leather, price officials reported. Leather and shoe prices have been depressed and are lower than existing ceilings.

Meanwhile, a threatened shortage of tires next summer has been averted by the government's decision to stop allocating American made general purpose rubber.

James A. Newman, vice president of the B. F. Goodrich Company says the elimination of government restriction on the consumption of new rubber should make it possible for tire manufacturers to produce at least 71,000,000 passenger tires in 1952, or approximately 5,000,000 more than the probable production of 1951.

BRITAIN TO PAY—The British government has announced payment of $176,200,000 on United States and Canadian loans. The payment has an ironic twist since the British have asked the United States for another $600,000,000 in economic help during the next six months.

Britain owes the United States $4,350,000,00 and Canada $1,185,00,000. She has until the year 2000 to pay off these debts, incurred after World War II had ravaged the British economy. The first installment due on the American loan made in 1946 amounts to $138,500,000. Of this, $87,000,000 represents interest.

This is the first picture released of the nation's newest tank, the giant T-36. Ordnance officials say it will outslug any land-fighting machine ever built, although they will not reveal any statistics. They even photographed it blacked out against the setting sun to safeguard military security.

FARM LABOR SHORTAGE

Government Speeds Up Refugee Program

John W. Gibson, chairman of the Displaced Persons Commission, has announced revitalization of the commission's program for the processing of escaped persons with farm experience in order to ready a large pool of good dairy, "dirt", and general farmers for sponsorship by Americans. The action has been taken in view of the Department of Agriculture's estimate that next summer will mark a peak in the current farm labor shortage.

Gibson explained that any American farmer who can guarantee a job, housing, inland transportation, and that the refugee will not become a public charge, can become a sponsor.

Farmers can get further information from the U.S. Displaced Persons Com., Washington 25. D. C.

1952 Promotions Are Listed; Resorts Plan Vacation-Time

Home town merchants have found that coordination of their advertising and promotional efforts with special events has helped in achieving better selling and higher profits. At the same time, the home town consumer has found it to their advantage to know when promotions are planned and what bargains will be offered at a given time.

Many promotional events are planned primarily to help sell merchandise. And some that were organized for other purposes do nevertheless have business aspects. There are some charitable and religious observances in which businessmen take part for the general good of the community. Resorts Operate on Reduced Budgets

Undaunted by three straight years of sparse snow, New England resort operators are planning for a big season this winter.

Without most of the New England states operating on reduced recreational budgets, the theme for the coming season will be "New England skiing always is best in March". Placards, partly financed by the states and partly by resort operators, will be posted in conspicuous places during the early months of the season.

To those who live in or near the major ski areas, the decline in March business has been a puzzle. The Federal Reserve Bank of Boston, which keeps statistics on the winter sports business, suggests that one of the reasons is the relatively early return of spring in cities like Boston and New York.

Promotion for a longer skiing season has been under way for several years.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD
Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!
Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes mostly waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, run-down feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self—full of life! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

HOMER CROY'S
Jesse James
WAS MY NEIGHBOR

THE STORY SO FAR:

Bob Ford's plot to kill Jesse James succeeds. He shoots Jesse down in his own house, then gives himself up. He finally manages to collect a meager portion of the original $10,000 reward. Although Jesse's body is nearly desecrated by souvenir-hunters, his friends and relatives get it shipped back to his mother's old home where he and Frank had grown up. There he is buried. Jesse's wife is now destitute, so their possessions are sold at auction — for $117.65. Meanwhile, Frank, who has been living in Baltimore hears of Jesse's death and surrenders himself to the governor of Missouri. His trial is scheduled to be held in the courthouse at Gallatin.

CHAPTER XV

The men bore down on the sheriff like dogs on a bone, but he issued the tickets as he saw fit. Firmly at the door was a deputy sheriff who stated that no guns could be toted inside; they must be checked. At this news arguments began to go off like popcorn in a kettle; men who had packed guns ever since the end of the Civil War said they'd be damned if they'd give them up: a gun was a man's private property and he could do whatever he wanted to with it. Wasn't this a free country? But after no end of hot words, the men were finally talked out of their guns and went into the makeshift courtroom feeling half-dressed.

So grave, so serious was the matter that Frank had eight lawyers; one of them, later, was in President Woodrow Wilson's cabinet; another became a federal judge. They were the biggest potatoes in the bin. When Frank entered, under guard, silence fell on the courtroom; men who had never seen him before looked on him and liked what they saw. He was one of their own. Aligned against him were State of Missouri, the railroads, banks, and the express companies; and the State of Missouri, through the devious ways of the governor, had caused Frank's brother to be shot in the back. Also lined up against Frank was Dick Liddil; and there came into the courtroom a flood of Fords, ready to bury the hatchet . . . in Frank's back.

Frank Is Acquitted In Spectacular Trial

William H. Wallace was a spellbinder who had been elected prosecuting attorney on the platform of 'Break Up The James Gang.' His record was one hundred per cent.

Wallace had eighty-nine witnesses to prove that Frank was guilty as a dog.

Frank had thirty-nine to prove he wasn't.

However, among Frank's witnesses was the most popular man in Missouri—General Jo Shelby. What Robert E. Lee was to the South, Jo Shelby was to Missouri—that is, to the Southern part of Missouri. When he saw Frank, he started toward him, saying, "There's a hand I'm proud to shake." The judge hit the gavel so hard that pigeons on the roof blinked.

The trial began. It turned on as curious a point as you will ever come across—the identification of Frank James. He had to be placed at the robbery. Wallace found a preacher who testified Frank had stayed overnight with him the day before the robbery, and the way he identified him was that Frank quoted Shakespeare. Never before in all outlaw history had a bandit been accused of quoting Shakespeare. Not only that, but the preacher told exactly what Frank had quoted. Frank hung his head, whipped. It just showed what Shakespeare could lead to.

Frank's sister Susie, who was now Mrs. Allen H. Parmer, testified that on the day of the robbery Frank had been with her and her husband on a ranch in Texas, but that couldn't offset the Shakespeare taint. The simple farmer jury looked at Frank questioningly . . . there was something intrinsically wrong with a person who would accept another's hospitality and then sit around quoting poetry. Why didn't he damn the railroads like a man ought?

That night the men got their arms back and slept in the yard; next morning, when court opened, they checked them again and went into the opera house. It was a privilege to be there and see that a Southerner got a fair deal.

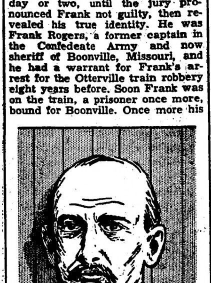
Wallace was famous as an orator. As the trial drew to a close he soared to heights never before approached even in Missouri. Pointing dramatically at Frank, he said: "Farewell, Frank James, prince of robbers, you are going to your death. You are the cruelest horseman who ever wore a spur, or held a rein. You seemed like Death itself mounted on a pale charger. Thou foul bolt on the escutcheon of the fair State of Missouri—farewell!"

The jury went out. But it was hardly away long enough to turn around; then it brought back the verdict—Not Guilty. It liked the escutcheon just as it was. People shouted; the judge grabbed his gavel; pigeons went fluttering away.

But the end wasn't yet. Frank was out, but only temporarily, for the State of Alabama grabbed him and hustled him down to Huntsville to stand trial of the charge of having robbed the government paymaster at Muscle Shoals. This would settle his hash. No prejudiced Missouri jury.

The Alabama jury listened to the evidence and brought in its verdict—Not Guilty.

While Frank was being tried, a mysterious man had arrived in Huntsville, had asked some questions, then had gone to a hotel and registered. He said he was from Versailles, Kentucky. He waited a day or two, until the jury pronounced Frank not guilty, then revealed his true identity. He was Frank Rogers, a former captain in the Confedeate Army and now sheriff of Boonville, Missouri, and he had a warrant for Frank's arrest for the Otterville train robbery eight years before. Soon Frank was on the train, a prisoner once more, bound for Boonville. Once more his mother was on the depot platform and again put her handless arm around his neck—this amazing mother who believed so deeply and unshakingly in her wayward sons. The people on the platform were so glad to see Frank that it practically amounted to a reception.



Frank announced that although he was sick, he was going with his mother. Her son! her wonderful Buck.

I saw hanging on the wall in the law office of Roy D. Williams at Boonville the bond that Frank James put up. It was signed by seven men who, at that time, were prominent in Missouri: 'Good, substantial citizens.' Popular sentiment was against another trial. After all, the gang was gone; besides Frank only Jim Cummins was left, and what was the use of trying that old horsethief? The days that had brought about banditry—the Border Warfare days—were over; a new life and a new way of living had come to the Middle West. Let the thing go! And the state did.

Jesse's Body Moved To New Burial Place

And so at last Frank James was a free man.

The world had changed; the great days of banditry were gone. A few outlaws, such as the Daltons, rode briefly to early lead-filled graves. The new generation hardly knew what the Border Warfare was. Clay County itself had changed—Clay County which had been the hottest part in the bed of the Border coals. But even this had begun to cool; a little sputtering along the edges, that was all. 'Aunt Zerel' had cooled; that was the final test. Frank had been at home now for years; grandchildren were coming along. And the body of Jesse James was no longer in peril of snatchers. Twenty years had passed since he had been buried in the yard of her home; she could look out the window of her room and see the grave and she could rock on the porch and see it. Now she gave orders that the body was to be moved and taken to Mount Olivet, the family cemetery at Kearney.

The farm was rented and, for the time being, she and Frank were living at a hotel in Kearney. It was June 29, 1902, a Sunday. Jesse Junior had come, the night before, from Kansas City to be with his grandmother; he was now a strapping young man, rather on the goodlooking side, with his father's blue eyes and high cheekbones. He bought a coffin and made arrangements with two grave-openers, and on this Sunday morning the gravediggers got into a spring-wagon and started out to the farm. Jesse and his uncle, John T. Samuels, followed. They arrived at five o'clock in the morning and went to the grave under the coffee-bean tree.

The two gravediggers set to work. Seven feet down. At last one of the picks sent up a grating sound; there it was—the burial box. The sides of the grave, at the bottom, were widened, planks slipped under, ropes attached, and the men started to lift the coffin. There was a crashing sound—the bottom of the casket had fallen out and so had Jesse James's skull!

The box was lifted out as best it could be done with the rotting and decaying wood, and all that was left of Jesse James was scraped up and put into the new casket. It was a grisly scene.

One of the diggers got back into the grave, picked up the skull, and handed it to young Jesse. He turned it over, silently inspecting it. There, behind the right ear, was a bullet hole almost as large as a quarter. And little Tim Howard recognized the gold-filled teeth.

Jesse's decayed arms were arranged over his breast, as they had been in the original burial, and the coffin carried into the room where Jesse had slept with Bob Ford a few nights before Ford had shot him down, the room where Jesse had courted Zee Mimms, where his mother had lost her hand and his half-brother his life. How much of violence and gentleness that room had seen! And now Jesse was in it again, stretched out between two chairs.

Young Jesse and John Samuels drove back to Kearney, where Mrs. Samuels was waiting. They told her all that had happened. Frank was upstairs in his room and the two young men went to him. Meantime the pallbearers were gathering—all Quantrill raiders or men who had ridden with Jesse. Time was having its way with them; eyes were growing dim and hair gray. Why, the younger generation hardly knew who they were! these old coots who liked to gab of days that were no more.

Jesse Laid to Rest For the Last Time

They almost filled the dining room, and Jesse's mother came and sat at the table with them. She had had made for her a combination steel knife and fork which she wielded with her left hand. Frank announced that, although he was sick, he was going with his mother. She told him what to wear and how to take care of himself, as she had so many years ago. Her son! Her wonderful Buck.

At last the hacks and spring-wagons and mounted riders arrived at the old farm; the gate opened, they went in, this strange, pathetic cavalcade.

"He used to play here in the yard," she said.

The funeral procession arrived at the cemetery. A grave had been dug, and toward it the old Quantrill warriors came, carrying the new black coffin on which was a nickel plate with the words: Jesse James, nothing more.

Frank James took off his hat and put his arm around his mother. The coffin was lowered; as it touched the bottom, she gave an agonized moan and dabbed her eyes with her one hand. During the filling of the grave no one spoke; there was no religious ceremony.

When the grave was filled, they began to talk a little in low tones. She pointed: "When my time comes, I want to lay down beside him."

She and Frank and young Jesse went to the spring-wagon. Frank got in beside her and they started back to the hotel.

There the ex-guerrillas talked, laughing over their old exploits. At last the whistle of the engine was heard and they walked the short distance to the depot. As the train began to pull out, there was a flurry of goodbyes. Then Frank went back to his mother.

Frank bought a farm near Fletcher, Oklahoma. As soon as he was settled she went to see him. It was nice to be with Frank and Ann, but she was, as she put it, getting to be a burden to herself. She enjoyed being with them, but the habits of a lifetime were hard upon her and she began to talk about wanting to go 'home;' things had to be taken care of; at last they put her on a train.

That night, on a Pullman sleeper, she began to feel badly; when she identified herself, the crew was surprised. They would do everything they could. But there was nothing they could do and she died on the train, on the night of February 10, 1911, eighty-seven years old—this woman who, so long ago, had left Kentucky as a tobacco bride to come to Missouri. How much of history had happened since then! And in how much of that history had she played a leading part.

The funeral was held in the Baptist church, just as Jesse's had been—the very church where Jesse had prayed for Frank. She was buried beside him. The inscription on the monument reads:

In Loving Remembrance of My Beloved Son
JESSE JAMES
Died April 3, 1882
Aged 34 Years, 6 Months, 28 Days
Murdered by a Traitor and Coward
Whose Name Is Not Worthy to Appear Here.

And there beside her, in final resting, are Dr. Rueben Samuels and Archie. Over her grave is a stone which reads MOTHER and over Dr. Samuels' is one which reads PAPPY.

The chief of the railroad's claim agency found it hard to believe the report submitted by one of his men which stated that the farmer had lost 2,025 pigs through the road's negligence, and, of course, he went out to the farm to interview the shipper again.

"That's a lot of pigs," the claims chief growled to the farmer. "Are you sure you lost that many?"

"Yeth," lisped the farmer.

"Thanks," said the wise claims chief and changed the original report to read: "Two sows and twenty-five pigs."

Driver's Habits

Some drivers wear out tires in 10,000 miles or less, others in 20,000 miles, some get 30,000 miles, and others greater average mileages. This is largely due to a driver's habits and operating conditions. "Jackrabbit" starts, sudden stops, excessive use of brakes, high speeds on curves and frequent stops and starts in traffic all tend to wear away tread rubber and rob the tire of miles of life!

Do Almost All Repair Work With Electric Farm Tools

Oscar Moen and sons Sanford and Norman, do practically all of their own farm machinery repair work, thanks to the electrically-operated tools they have in their farm machine shop.

Sanford Moen, who is pictured at the electric drill above, says, "There is very little machinery repair we can't do in our shop. And the fact we have these electric repair tools means our machinery is constantly in better condition, because we can do many jobs which we would never take to town."

This is an excellent example of how today's modern farmer is putting his rural electric power to work. It saves him time, saves him money, and helps him accomplish things he never could do before.

"We use our electrically-operated tools a lot," says Sanford. "And we make many things we couldn't buy. As an example, we built a cart for carrying milk cans . . . did all of the work in our machine shop."

The Moen family farms 8 miles east of Gary, Minnesota, and is a member of the Wild Rice Electric Cooperative.

If you are wondering how best to cut labor and power costs on your place — try electricity. You'll be amazed at the amount of work your electric hired hand can do for just pennies!

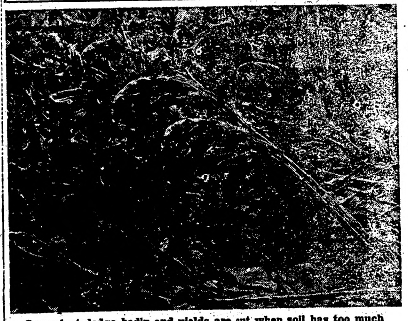
Well Balanced Diet of All Plant Nutrients Gives Top Corn Production, Builds Up Land



Corn plants lodge badly and yields are cut when soil has too much nitrogen, not enough potash.

LOADING up the soil with one plant nutrient while neglecting the others is like filling the gas tank on your car and letting the engine run dry of oil.

Howard Lathrope, Purdue University agronomist, points out that it takes a balance of gasoline, oil and a good spark to run a car.

"And," he says, "it takes a good balance of nitrogen, phosphate and potash to make a good corn crop."

Overfeeding the soil nitrogen cut corn growth in tests on the Charles Schenck farm in Davies county, Indiana, Lathrope reports. Three plots of corn each received 100 pounds of phosphate and potash per acre. One plot had 8 pounds of nitrogen, a second had 108 pounds and the third, 208 pounds.

Tissue tests of corn on the 8 pound plot showed no nitrogen, but ample phosphate and potash. As the nitrogen applications went up, the potash levels in the corn plants went down, reducing growth. On the plot where 208 pounds of nitrogen was applied, there was just not enough potash in the fertilizer to balance it out. The lack of potash caused a lack of energy foods in the plant. The root systems of the high nitrogen corn lodged badly.

Lathrope says that to get high corn yields, you need a soil well stocked with nitrogen, phosphate and potash in balanced supply. You need plenty of active organic matter to build the soil's tilth. This can be added by well-fertilized deep-rooted legumes such as alfalfa and sweet clover in the rotation. Finally, you need plenty of reserve nutrients to feed the bacteria and fungi that rot organic matter, fight plant diseases and release nutrients.

Early Days of Football

After due deliberation, President White replied, "I will not permit 30 men to travel 400 miles merely to agitate a bag of wind."

This Dummy's a Smart Dresser

HELPED BY master pattern-maker Louis Gordon, a dressmaker's dummy in a Minneapolis garment company tries on a new creation. Today this state, famed for "Minnesota Inspired Apparel," turns out huge quantities of smart dresses, lingerie, outerwear. Much of it is sold here, too. Example: on the iron ranges, miners' families are big customers of this and most Minnesota industries, with $50 million a year in ore pay. With fair tax treatment, the ore industry and the families of its employees can continue to be good customers of other Minnesota industries. Towel Shopping

The loops of a towel in large measure determine its absorbency. Look for towels with loops which are set reasonably close together and which are fairly long, about one-eighth of an inch. Longer loops make a towel soft and fluffy, but do not make for as good wear since they are apt to catch and pull out.

Portable Pin Cushion

During vacation time a wise traveler becomes Scotch about packing and luggage space. To conserve valuable room in milady's suitcase, stick needles, pins, and pen points into the thick torn stub end of an empty matchbook. Saves space prevents accidents.

Colonial Colors

In early Colonial houses, white paint was the only color used for woodwork, except for the real mahogany which was used in handrails and, occasionally, for stair balusters. The wide board floors were often painted red or squash color.

Match Glitter

Glamor in a matter of seconds! Almost every woman's sewing box contains a few brightly colored sequins. Several of these sparklers pasted on a plain matchbook cover in initials, a pattern design, or haphazardly, add a note of elegance to a tiny item.

New Use for Gypsum

Gypsum lath and wallboard are now available with aluminum foil backing. The paper thickness of foil, applied to the lath and wallboard during manufacture, offers the home an FHA-approved insulation against radiant heat and an excellent vapor barrier.

RESIDENT NURSE

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

CHAPTER I

The tall, angular girl turned before reaching the street. She stared up at the ugly brick building that had been her home for more than a dozen years. Her mouth twisted in something like a grimace which quickly changed to a smile. She waved her hand at a small boy watching from a window on the third floor, then hurried through the iron gate and winced as it clanged shut behind her. Even yet, the sound made her shiver—made her nerves tingle with dread. She knew she was silly to mind but she yearned for the time when the clanging behind her of that tall, heavy iron gate would mean freedom and the beginning of a new life. But not yet. She knew that Mrs. Overton intended keeping her here in the capacity of housemaid and children's nurse, without pay, until she should have reached the advanced age of sixteen. Only four months more to go! The matron was fond of reminding her that she owed that much and even more—immeasurably more—to The Home that had fed, sheltered and clothed her all these years.

Gay Recalls Thad Borden And Her Dislike For Him

Out of sight of The Home, Gay took off the plain straw hat she wore. It was good to feel the warm spring sun on her bare head. Mrs. Overton didn't approve of the current fashion of going about bareheaded and—as she expressed it—half-clad; but Gay looked forward to the time when she could have her hair short like other girls and dress as she pleased, even to wearing one of the much publicized one-piece bathing suits and spending a full day at Crown Lake Beach—alone—quite unsupervised. She had been there several times. The Kiwanis and Rotary Clubs gave picnics for the orphans each season; but on those occasions she had been assigned to the job of minding the younger children and helping with the food. Mrs. Overton had watched her like a hawk each summer, especially last year when Thad Borden had been so fresh.

Thad had been enjoying himself pestering the youngsters, especially Benny Heaton. She supposed it had been just good-natured fun to Thad, but Benny was close to tears and when she interfered he immediately transferred his teasing to her. Much to the amusement of the children and his own chagrin she had slapped his face. She had done it impulsively and instantly regretted it. He had chased her down the beach, and even though she had always been the fleetest runner in Bethesda, had caught her near the pump house and kissed her soundly. It was then she had cried—angry tears of humiliation and hatred, so that while he held her firmly she managed to wrench free and slap him again. It was then the men in the pump house came to the rescue, ordering the angry young man to leave the girl alone.

She was thinking of Thaddeus Borden now as she crossed the street to the drug store. This was where he and his pals hung out when he was home. Gay had seen him with Vivian Poole and the rest of the high school and college crowd, having sodas and nut sundaes. And sometimes she felt envious of the fun they were having—the pleasure of being one of a crowd. Vivian was easily the leader of the gay younger set in Bessemer and Thad Borden's girl.

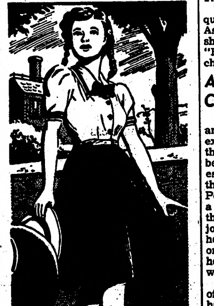
Vivian was a golden blonde—beautiful and popular. And why not, Gay asked herself. Her father was the richest man in Bessemer and they lived in the big stucco house on North Hill. Gay had walked past it one day when she had taken the long way home. However, she didn't envy Vivian either her beauty or her palatial home. She envied her because she belonged—because she had parents.

Even as she approached the store she recognized the blue roadster at the curb and drew back. A swift glance told her that Vivian was inside at one of the small tables and with her was Thaddeus Borden. Gay had forgotten it was the spring vacation—no doubt the store would be overrun with that gay crowd. She would wait or go to that new chain store over on Second Street. Anyway, she would change Mrs. Overton's books first. Perhaps they would be gone by the time she got back. She went on down the street, her bright mood overcast. She wondered if Thad had ever kissed Vivian. Probably he had, but not in the humiliating way he had taken advantage of Frances Gaynor—orphan. Her heavy braids swung defiantly as she mounted the steps of the library building.

"Hello, Frances!" Miss Boothe, the librarian, greeted her as she placed books and card before her on the desk. "What does Mrs. Overton want this time? More mysteries?"

"Oh, yes, a few more nice juicy murders, Miss Boothe," Gay told her. "I wonder just what there is about being matron of an orphan asylum that should make her enjoy murder stories. No doubt there are times when some of us deserve murdering and maybe she relieves her feelings by reading about them. It's a good thing we're not nervous at Bethesda, isn't it?" She laughed gleefully.

Gay liked Miss Boothe. The librarian treated her as an adult, and in the same friendly manner she used toward other patrons. Together they found three fresh mystery tales and Gay departed in lighter spirits. Now for the drug store. She liked the smell of it—liked visiting with Mr. Willkie, the owner. He, too, treated her as an adult and as if she were one of his most valued customers. He always asked after the children—remembering many of them by name—and inquired particularly after the welfare of Benny Heaton who was delicate and Gay's especial charge. She often bought a few peppermint or horehound drops for him when she was lucky enough to own a nickel or a dime. Now she was humming softly to herself as she entered the almost empty store and paused when Mr. Willkie came hurrying from the rear room. He seemed perturbed—almost worried.



Out of sight of The Home, Gay took off the plain straw hat she wore. It was good to feel the warm spring sun on her bare head.

What About Her Life After Leaving Bethesda?

"Did you meet Thad Borden on your way here, my dear?" he asked. Gay stiffened and shook her head. "No, sir," she answered.

"His father needs him immediately." He went to the door and looked up and down the street. Gay stood irresolute. Should she tell Mr. Willkie she thought she had seen the doctor's son headed out the Lake Road in Vivian Poole's blue roadster? At least she had seen the roadster and supposed Thad was in it; but she wasn't quite sure and decided against it. The druggist came from the door, muttering something about headstrong youngsters without any sense of responsibility. He went to the telephone and reported that he had no idea where Thad might be and returned to Gay. He smiled.

"What is it you want, my dear?"

Gay stated her errand and he brought out the elaborately wrapped bar of soap. "Not for you—I hope," he chided. "You don't need beauty aids and shouldn't for a long, long time—if ever."

"It's for Myra Welles, our cook, Mr. Willkie," she told him, flushing at his implied compliment.

"Oh, well," he grinned, "faith's a great thing, my dear. How's Benny this spring?"

"Not too strong, Mr. Willkie," Gay told him, "but I'm hoping that the warmer weather and sunshine will help."

"I'm wondering what Bethesda will do when you leave it, Frances," the old man said, his gaze softening as he looked at the tall, slender girl in the shabby coat.

"Four months more, Mr. Willkie," Gay caroled. "I can hardly wait."

"What are you planning—where are you going?" he wanted to know.

"Miss Alden wants me to come to her," the girl replied. "You know I helped out there when her brother's family visited her last fall. The maid she had wants to get married."

The druggist shook his head. "You should be in school, my dear. You're far too young to be the slave of a cantankerous old maid."

"But Miss Alden isn't cantankerous, Mr. Wilkie," Gay defended hotly. "She's sweet and she's going to teach me so that I can finish high school. And I'll earn money, too. I want to go to her—to get away from Bethesda—and yet I dread leaving Benny, Mr. Willkie. He—he clings to me." The wide gray eyes were troubled and the old man hastened to put a scoop of peppermint and horehound lozenges into a paper bag. He held it out to her but Gay shook her head.

"I haven't any money of my own right now, Mr. Willkie," she told him without embarrassment.

"This is for Benny—my treat," he explained. "Share them with him, my dear—and good luck!"

The door opened and Thaddeus Borden entered. Gay passed him, head high, eyes cold and straight ahead. Mr. Willkie pounced upon him.

"Your father wants you at once, Thad. Urgent."

"Okay," the young man said, his quizzical gaze on the departing girl. As she reached the door he whistled shrilly, then grinned and called: "Hi, Redhead! Still carrying a chip, I see."

Accident on Playground Cripples Little Benny

And Gay went back to Bethesda and for the first time in her life experienced a feeling of relief as the high iron gate clanged shut behind her. At least here in Bethesda she was somebody. Benny thought so and a lot of the others. Perhaps some day she could become a nurse—a trained one—and maybe the Board would appoint her to the job of watching over the children's health. She had done it for years—or tried to; but she had felt so helpless at times — not knowing what was best to do.

Benny Heaton had been ill most of the winter and now that spring had come Gay was hoping he would improve. He looked very frail and Doctor Borden shook his head and wished he could be sent to some milder climate where he might have a chance. The summer improvement did little more than give the child a fighting chance and he lost all that he had gained before the tough winter was little more than half over. They had tried hospitalizing him but it hadn't worked. It seemed strange to Gay that he should be homesick for Bethesda. She didn't realize that he was homesick for her tenderness and very real affection.

When the boy was able to be up and about she used to take him over to the playground and play jackstraws or roll a ball along the ground to him. He tired easily and she watched him as a mother might and at the first sign of fatigue would lead him indoors and cover him warmly while he rested. But she was glad to see that he had been showing definite signs of returning strength and she encouraged him in mild exercise. He would toss a ball to her and she would toss it back to him. After all, he was only six. He looked enviously at the swings which the children loved and fought to possess. Sometimes, when luck was with them, they managed to reach one first and Gay would swing him gently back and forth and once he had asked her to let him swing alone. She had done so, standing guard, and the lad had been inordinately excited and happy about it, boasting to the others how he had been swinging all alone. With Gay's warning eye on them, the other boys merely looked vague, not daring to jeer, and Benny's happiness was complete.

Now as she went upstairs in search of him, she wondered if this was to be another happy day for him. She hoped so. He had felt no recurrence of that old pain in his side. The day was warm and sunny—June was just around the corner—lovely June, and she had only three months more to go. She couldn't find Benny and one of the girls told her he was in the playground where the boys were having a game of baseball. Of course Benny wasn't playing or even on the sidelines watching. For the first time in days he had a swing to himself and was making the most of the privilege. Gay stood on the back steps and watched him. He was smiling happily, his thin hands holding tightly to the ropes and his skinny legs straight out before him.

"Poor kid!" she murmured then shouted a warning as one of the bigger boys caught the swing as it lifted and gave it a mighty shove. Benny cried out in terror and Gay shouted to him to hang on. But the youngster seemed to wilt. His hands relaxed and he toppled to the ground where he lay, a crumpled heap on the hard, packed earth.

"I didn't mean it — I didn't—honest, Gay," the culprit cried, as the girl went down on her knees beside the unconscious child. She held back the others who would have carried him inside.

It's A Gift

It was Smedley's first night in jail and he noticed that one of the inmates in his block would call out a number and the rest would howl with glee. Then the process was repeated by someone else.

Smedley asked his cellmate what it was all about and got this answer: "Well, we've been here so long and heard the same jokes so many times, we numbered the stories to save time. Now someone calls out a number, and we identify it with a certain funny story."

Next night, Smedley tried his hand. "Twenty-six," he yelled. Utter silence followed. "Fifty-two," he yelled. Not a chuckle. "What's the matter?" Smedley asked his cellmate.

"Well," said the inmate, "it's like this. Some folks can tell a joke and some folks just can't."

Americans Disappointed by Red's List of 3,198 Prisoners-of-War

LAUGHTER AND TEARS—Tears and laughter echoed in the home towns of America. The Communists handed over their list of American prisoners, containing 3,198 names.

For mothers and fathers, sweethearts and wives, of these 3,198 there was laughter and one of the happiest holiday seasons on record. But for other thousands there were tears and despair.

The nation as a whole, however, was shocked and disappointed by the list. What had happened to the remaining 11,559 American soldiers known missing in Korea?

A civilian employee of the Defense department's public information office hands reporters the first list of names of 3,198 American prisoners-of-war as reported by the Communists.

There was no answer to this question. But all too well the people of America remember the stories of atrocities made public recently in Korea.

And even as thousands were rejoicing at word that their fighting men are still alive, the Department of Defense and President Truman warned that the Communist prisoner-of-war reports are completely unverified. The enemy has refused to permit Red Cross inspection of its camps.

White House Secretary Joseph Short told newsmen: "The President has asked me to urge every news medium to stress as often as possible that the prisoner-of-war list is entirely unverified.

"He appreciates the efforts already made along this line but believes it important to continue them—to do even more than already has been done.

"This country has no way of verifying whether the list is accurate or inaccurate, true or false, complete or incomplete.

"For the sake of the families whose sons are missing in action, everyone should treat this list with skepticism."

But for the mothers of America there was one reaction: "Thank God for such wonderful news. It answers tens of thousands of prayers."

Shortly after the names of Americans on the Communist list was made public, the UN handed the Reds a stiffly-worded note demanding that the enemy account for more than 1,000 prisoners not named. The UN contends these prisoners had been named in earlier Communist propaganda broadcasts, but were not on the prisoner-of-war list. What has become of them, the UN wants to know?

EUROPE'S UNITY—There has been a growing feeling in the rural sections of America that the countries of western Europe are making little progress toward unity in spirit or force. Secretary of State Acheson, however, believes otherwise.

Acheson said recently that Europeans have made more progress in the last four years toward bringing about this unity than they did in the previous five centuries. As examples, he pointed out the six-nation Europe-army program and the Schuman plan for pooling coal and steel resources.

One of the main blocks in the formation of the Europe-army is the British unwillingness to contribute troops to such an organization. Before the plan can succeed as planned by General Eisenhower, the British will have to change their policy which dates from the time of Queen Elizabeth.

COST-OF-LIVING—As 1951 came to a close, the Bureau of Labor Statistics released figures on the cost-of-living for the American family. The bureau's index hit a new peak of 10.8 per cent above the level of June, 1950, when the Korean war broke out.

The bureau said the rising costs of miscellaneous goods and services, and higher prices for fresh fruits and vegetables, were largely responsible for the increase.

NEW BLACKMAIL—Hungary, with a record of holding American citizens to gain concessions from the United States, has embarked again upon the blackmail trail. This time she is holding four U. S. airmen whose plane was forced down by Soviet fighter planes after it strayed across the Hungarian border.

The Soviet puppet says she will bring to trial the four airmen who violated the Hungarian border "with the criminal intentions of dropping spies and diversionists in the territory of the Hungarian Republic."

Last year Hungary jailed American businessman Robert A. Vogeler on charges of espionage and later released him after the U. S. agreed to a number of concessions.

It is now but a matter of time before the Hungarians ask for more concessions. And if the blackmail works as before, the airmen will be released after much propaganda and the concessions granted.

THE BIG TRAGEDY—Among other things, the year 1951 will be remembered for the big tragedy—the millionth traffic fatality.

The nation's tragic parade of motor vehicle accident deaths began September 13, 1899. H. H. Bliss, victim No. 1, was killed by a horseless carriage in New York City.

Heavy snow and ice-crusted highways and the fact that thousands of Americans made holiday trips, contributed to the traffic death rate late in the year.

U.S. BALKS—For the first time in the history of the United Nations, the United States balked at the levy it must pay to help maintain that organization. The U.S. cited its huge expenditures in the Korean war and the billions spent to uphold the charter principles which the United Nations was not in a position to implement.

The assembly, however, approved a 1952 budget of $48,096,780, of which the U.S. will pay 36.9 per cent. Although less than last year's levy, the U.S. objected that no state should pay more than one third of the budget.

The British are to pay 10.56 per cent of the fiscal year 1952 and the Soviet Union, the Ukraine, and White Russia 11.49 per cent.

Meeting for the first time since World War II, two old friends, Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower (left) and Prime Minister Winston Churchill (right) met in Paris recently for a series of conferences on the European army plan. Eisenhower was understood to have made a fervent appeal to Churchill to give more encouragement to the plan. There were also reports circulated after Churchill returned to England that Eisenhower expressed his willingness to "stay on the job" for a longer period if Britain would give greater support to the plan.

MEAT FORECAST

Smaller Spring Pig Crop in Prospect

Hopes for a larger supply of meats in butcher shops next year and lower prices received a jolt with the government's forecast of a 9 per cent reduction in next spring's pig crop. It may mean noticeably higher meat prices, the Department of Agriculture believed.

A department survey indicated the 1952 pig crop would number 56,500,000 head, compared with 61,957,000 last spring, and 55,407,000 for the 10-year (1940-49) average.

Responsibility of the reduction in production rests largely with a dwindling supply of corn and other livestock feeds. For the past two years the nation has been using grains at a faster rate than it has produced them. The deficit has been taken from reserves accumulated in 1948 and 1949.

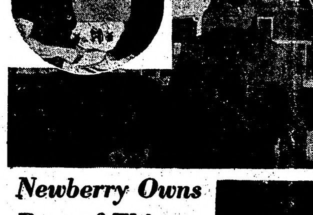
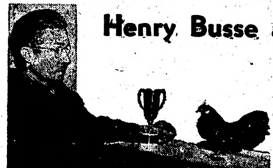
The Riemers Enjoy Life!



Looking over their purebred Angus, checking their wheat crop, or going on a trip together, the Fred F. Riemers always enjoy life—including all-electric living. Farming the old Hanna farm near Melville, N. Dak., the Riemers have been served electricity by Otter Tail for 20 years. Even today (see cut) Fred still gets a thrill out of having plenty of electrically-heated hot water to wash in. (Photos by Jud Tracy, Carrington)

Newberry Owns Part of This

Jamestown insurance man, Frank Newberry (at right), listens attentively as plant operator Arthur Bitterman and plant superintendent Bob Beckley explain the making of electricity in the Jamestown steam plant. Frank is one of more than 6,000 stockholders whose invested savings enable Otter Tail to expand their plants and bring more electricity to more people at less cost. (Photo by King Studio, Jamestown)



Henry Busse and Prize Winner

Day times Henry Busse is utilityman at the Crookston plant—one of 1,004 Otter Tail men and women who help bring you your electric service. After hours Henry's hobby is raising bantams, winning trophies like the one shown (at New Ulm in 1950). Henry took several major prizes at the 1951 Minnesota State Fair, last month won 13 ribbons on 14 birds at the Minnesota State Poultry Show.

ECONOMIST SPEAKS AT 2 MEETINGS

Spoke at Newfolden and Middle River Friday Afternoon and Evening.

Dan Dvoracek, farm economist from the University Farm in St. Paul gave two lectures on inflation last week; one at Middle River Friday afternoon and the other at Newfolden Friday evening. The Economist proved to be a very interesting lecture and kept his audiences spellbound for two full hours.

At both meetings, he was accompanied by County Agent Frank W. Forbes of Warren.

His topic was "Inflation—Can It Be Controlled"?

He listed four inflationary periods in history, (1) War of 1812 (2) Civil War, (3) World War 1 and (4) World War 2 and now in preparation for World War 3.

About half way through his lecture, he paused for a question and answer period, and during this time some very interesting side-issues were brought up.

The speaker explained inflation as "plentiful dollars chasing scarce goods".

The discussion also touched on world affairs.

Former Newfolden Man Buys Holt Tavern

Alfred Erickson, former Marsh Grove farmer, has purchased the Harris Burton tavern in Holt, and has already taken over management of the place. The Ericksons are still living in Grand Forks where they have lived for years, but will move to Holt as soon as a son of their's takes over the management of their service station.

Mr. Erickson takes care of the tavern over the week end, while Mr. Burton is running it for him the balance of the time.

The Burtons plan to leave Holt in the near future.

MARRIAGE LICENSE

Marriage license issued during the past week by Clerk of the District Court were as follows:

Earl Bergeron and Lucille Eva Schiller, both of Argyle.

Evangelism Conference

Nationwide attention will be centered on Minnesota and Minneapolis this month when the eight church bodies of the National Lutheran Council Churches of the U. S. and Caada will hold their Evangelism Conference at the Minneapolis armory, January 23 to 27. The purpose of the conference will be to mobilize the lay members of the churches for evangelism. Officials report this will likely be one of the most significant events in Lutheranism since the Protestant Reformation in 1518.

"For months, hundreds of Lutheran committees have been working on this conference, and hundreds of thousands will share in the evangelism of our times" the Rev. Otto Helsa, conference publicity chairman, stated.

Members in attendance will represent two-thirds of American Lutherans, the eight bodies comprising the sponsoring churches numbering over four million persons in membership.

150 pre-conference rallies are being held in strategic Lutheran church centers, and prayer-services in the homes and 10,000 Lutheran churches throughout the nation, for this Conference. During these days, hearts and minds will be focused on the theme Share Christ Today.

Vast and challenging exhibits are being arranged. Demonstration periods and group discussions will stress the "How" of effective witnessing. Four thousand pastors and laymen are expected to register for training sessions in the techniques on Evangelism and 10,000 for the evening sessions.

74 nationally known Lutheran speakers and leaders from coast to coast, will take part on the program. Lutheran choirs from many major cities will be united in a mass chorus with approximately 3,000 voices for a concert on Sunday evening, Jan. 27.

Rev. Elmer C. Reinertson of Minneapolis is conference chairman, the Rev. Royal Lescher, of New York, conference secretary

Room 1

We didn't get time to have the candles lit on our tree until after vacation. Some of us had never seen real candles on a tree.

Lorna wrote a perfect weekly reader test on Friday.

Orvis, Larry, Lorna, Leonard, Marlys H., and Dale had 100 in Friday's spelling test.

Quite a few from our room have skates so we make good use of the rink.

On Monday all 32 of the pupils in our room were in school. We are glad those who were sick are well again.

Room 2

In geography the 4th graders are studying "Netsook and Klaya in the Far North" In connection free hand drawings are made for our movie machine and cutouts for our shadow box.

We have a Roundup in reading library books. For every book read a colored seal is mounted on an envelope, containing a card with pupil's name, title of book and author. The pupil gives a report on the book. A picture of a cowboy mounted on his horse is the center of attraction on the chart.

In our spelling contest our snowmen have taken hard whacks by the good spellers. This week will decide who the winners are.

We are glad to have Howard Davis and Mabel Haglund in our classes again.

Room 3

We are happy to have Deanna and Lavonne back to school.

This week we had our test in Social Studies and Arithmetic.

In Social Studies our bulletin board reads "Minnesota Industries". We found pictures of each industry and we found that Minnesota has all the basic industries including fishing and shipping. Mining and agriculture are the most important.

Room 4

We have been writing semester tests.

Miss Ruth Beddie, Area Girl Scout Director, called at school Friday. She will be here Feb. 1, for our International program and will bring the film "Hands Across the sea." World pins will be presented also Hostess and Cooking Badges which the girls have earned.

Three magazines, Popular Mechanics, Boys Life and Nature have been purchased for our library with part of our activity money. We are having spelling tryouts to determine who will participate in the contest at Warren.

The First Hundred are the Hardest

The hardest thing about saving money is getting started—putting the first five, ten or fifteen dollars in your savings account. But saving is a habit like any thing else.

After you've made four or five deposits -- after you've saved the first hundred dollars -- then it's easier to save something every month than it is to spend everything you make.

Start a savings account today -- save your first hundred dollars -- then see how easy it will be to accumulate a substantial amount.

Mechanical Swatter

Cows operate the controls to get rid of horseflies, with a machine devised at the University of Illinois. Pyrenone, a combination of piperonyl butoxide and pyrethrins, is the only insecticide which controls the pest, and it is sprayed on the cattle when they step on a treadle in the stall-shaped device. Bossy, the scientists report, has learned to step into the machine voluntarily when the flies become too annoying.

Great Undertaking

In the construction of California's great Central Valley water project, tremendous obstacles in geography and climate were overcome by innovations in engineering and planning. In addition to representing the longest mass movement of water ever attempted by man, the Central Valley Project features in themselves are outstanding examples of engineering and construction.

Remove Wax

Before refinishing a surface with paint, varnish, shellac or enamel, make certain that there is no wax present so the new coating will adhere properly. Wax can be removed with turpentine, mineral spirits, or one of the new preparations made for the purpose. After the new finish is thoroughly dry, a new protective coating of wax can be applied.

Rice Exports

United States rice is exported principally to Cuba and Europe and is shipped to the domestic possessions, Puerto Rico and Hawaiian Islands. During the last decade, United States rice also has been exported in considerable quantities to China, Philippine Islands, Indonesia and Japan.

Sly Animal

The cuscus is a small animal of New Guinea that is somewhat similar to the flying squirrel. When it thinks it is in danger, the cuscus suspends itself from a branch by its long prehensile tail, swaying among the leaves as if it were some dead fruit. It will remain in this position as long as it thinks it is observed or until exhausted.

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: Gay Gaynor, Bethesda orphanage inmate, anticipates her 18th birthday and freedom from the "home," and recalls with contempt the time Thad Borden, son of Dr. Borden, kissed her at an orphans' picnic where he was an intruder. Thad is the constant "date" of beautiful, tempestuous Vivian Poole, haughty daughter of the richest man in Bessemer. Dr. Borden has a special affection for Gay. He disapproves of his son's relationship with Vivian, whom he fears Thad might marry. Gay returns to the orphanage from an errand for the superintendent just in time to see a bully shove an invalid, Benny Heaton, from a swing.

CHAPTER II

"Don't touch him!" she warned. "You, Sammy Martin, call Doctor Borden—quick! He's hurt—terribly hurt! There, there darling," she crooned as a faint moan came from the slightly parted lips. "Doc will make you well. Gay's here. Beat it—all of you!" she ordered fiercely. "And keep quiet—if you can."

Mrs. Overton bustled out followed by Myra, the laundress, and the part-time maid, but Gay continued to hold her place beside him, her hand holding one of his and her voice crooning softly.

"Get up, Frances!" the matron demanded sharply. "Call the gardener and we'll get him inside. How did it happen? I do declare—don't just stand there. Call Jake."

"He must not be moved," Gay said firmly. "He's terribly injured and moving him would make him worse. We'll wait till Doc comes—he'll know what to do."

She Gets Credit For Saving a Life

"Nonsense!" Mrs. Overton cried. "You have always babied the boy and more than likely he's faking right now. Call Jake, Myra."

The cook turned uncertainly. "I think Gay's right, ma'am," she said timidly.

"Do as I say," the matron shouted "I do declare——" Myra slipped away.

"He'll not be moved until Doc says so," Gay announced stubbornly. "I should think you'd know that much—at least," she went on and heard the woman gasp but didn't care, for the high iron gate clanged and she heard the sound of hurrying footsteps along the concrete walk. The doctor had come.

Without a word he knelt on the hard ground beside Gay and his kind, competent fingers examined the limp body of the boy. Then he looked up at Mrs. Overton and said crisply, "Call the ambulance. He's badly hurt."

The doctor rose to his feet. "He must not be moved about. It's his spine now as well as his heart. A good thing you didn't attempt it before I came. Somebody had good sense."

"I'm glad you give us that much credit, Doctor," Mrs. Overton said stiffly. "Is there anything I can do?"

"Yes. Keep the others quiet and away from windows—if you can. Children should be spared unhappiness where possible—they'll have to face plenty of it later. I'll stay here—help get him into the ambulance. Run along, my dear," he said to Gay who still knelt with one of Benny's hands in hers. She shook her head.

"You heard the doctor, Frances," Mrs. Overton said crisply. "Get up at once."

"I shall stay right here with him," the girl replied quietly. "And I'm going to the hospital with him. He—he needs me. He—he——" The gray eyes filled and she blinked rapidly so the tears didn't spill over.

"Okay," the doctor said, waving his hand to the others. "That's all for now," he went on, and stared impatiently toward the street listening for the wail of the siren. At last it came and a white-clad doctor and nurse hurried to the spot followed by two orderlies bearing a stretcher. "Easy there. Spine," Doctor Borden warned. Gay still held the boy's hand.

"Let go, sister," the young doctor said and the nurse put a comforting arm about Gay's shoulders.

"Your brother will be all right with us, my dear," she told her. "Don't worry."

"He isn't her brother, Thompson," a new voice said derisively, and Gay's anger flared. "The gal's made a mollycoddle out of that youngster—the kid's been utterly spoiled and——"

"That'll do, son," the doctor interrupted grimly. "The girl has probably saved his life—on more than one occasion, I suspect. We'll take good care of him, my dear," he said to Gay, patting her gently. "I'll let you know how he is as soon as we discover the extent of the injury. No doubt a normal youngster could have taken that fall without much damage but the condition of Benny's heart makes it a serious affair. Don't worry, Frances. I'll let you know. Come along, son."

"I'm—I'm sorry, Fr-Frances," Thad stammered, standing before her with bowed head. "I didn't know. I've been a heel. Please don't hate me. I'm——"

That spring day was to mark the turning point in Frances Gaynor's life. Mrs. Overton was incensed. She had long felt that Gay had never been properly impressed by her—that she might even hold her in derision — possibly contempt. Hitherto, however, she had actually flouted her authority even before the doctor and some of the staff, as she was fond of terming the employees. It was not to be borne. Frances was getting out of bounds. And then Fate took a hand and Miss Alden telephoned to say that her maid had gone—eloped with her young man, and she wanted Frances to come at once—today.

She walked through the late afternoon traffic without so much as glancing at either passer-by or shop window. Her thoughts were with the small boy, at the extent of whose injuries she could only guess. She knew Miss Alden was expecting her—probably waiting for her to prepare dinner; but just the same she must go to the hospital first and find out how things stood. She had no money for carfare and the broken and ungainly suitcase Myra had loaned her and which contained her meager supply of worldly goods was heavy; but she trudged on unmindful alike of its weight and the steepness of the long hill, and at last reached the big stone pile that housed the Bessemer Memorial Hospital. She went inside. A white-clad nurse was just crossing the lobby and Gay called to her.

And so the years passed away quickly. Gay grew into a tall, attractive young woman.

Aunt Grace Breaks News of Benny's Death

"I—I want to know how Benny is," she said, suddenly impressed by the place.

"Benny?" the nurse asked. "What's his other name? When did he come and just what——"

"He was hurt—a swing—his heart isn't good—Doctor Borden brought him—in the ambulance—this morning."

The nurse shook her head. "I'm sorry," she said. "You see, I'm in Women's Surgical right now and can't help you. Come on in and we'll ask the desk clerk. She might know."

But the desk clerk knew nothing. Her files showed that a child had been brought in from Bethesda suffering from spine injury and heart condition. Doctor Borden's patient. Gay turned away. Her heart was lead.

The nurse accompanied her into the lobby and said sympathetically, "Why don't you call Doctor Borden? He should be able to tell you. But you couldn't see the patient right now anyway because visiting hours are over and undoubtedly he won't be seeing anyone for a while. I shouldn't worry, my dear. Doctor Borden is a fine man—you can trust him—and us to do our best for the child."

Gay's gray eyes thanked her. Her voice was gone. She couldn't talk. She ran down the steps and along the street without seeing where she was going. A mud-spattered car drew up at the curb beside her and Doctor Borden called but at first she didn't hear; then as he repeated his call she stopped, turned and ran to him.

"How is he, Doctor?" she asked tremulously. "Is he terribly hurt? I have to know. Tell me."

"Come, my dear, get in here with me and I'll take you home. What's that you're carrying? Benny's belongings?" and as the girl shook her head, "Don't tell me you're running away, Frances. That would never do, you know. What has happened?"

"I'm leaving Bethesda. Miss Alden wants me to come take care of her. Her maid eloped this morning. Everything seems to happen today. But you haven't told me. How's Benny?"

"We can't tell yet, my dear," the doctor said soothingly. "He is still unconscious. But just as soon as I know I'll get word to you. You can trust me — I'll do my best for the boy. Only——" He paused, pondering the advisability of communicating his fears to the troubled girl beside him.

Gay caught her breath. "Then—then——"

"There's his heart, you know. It has never been sound. Remember those fainting spells—that cough and the shortness of breath so often accompanying the least exertion? I've been watching him for years, my dear—treating him regularly, but without much evidence of improvement. The lad was born with a heart lesion——"

"I know, and you think he is going to die. Isn't that what you mean, Doctor?" the girl asked, her face white.

"Oh, I wouldn't go so far as——"

"But it's what you think—and—he will want me with him and I—I won't be there."

Gay followed him inside the small comfortable home of Grace Alden and into a brand-new life. It was Miss Alden who broke the news of Benny's death that same evening after dinner and Gay cried a little.

"I Hope You'll Let Me Stay Forever"

And so the years passed away quickly. Gay grew into a tall, attractive young woman. They had been happy years for the most part, although somewhat hard and puzzling. Miss Alden's crippling arthritis confined her almost entirely to her specially constructed wheel chair. But she was a naturally cheerful woman and thoroughly enjoyed having Gay with her. She found her an apt pupil in every way and was proud as any parent when the girl finished the high school course with a fine rating and received a special diploma from the President of the School Board.

"Now what do you want to do, Gay?" Miss Alden asked on the day the girl tossed the roll of parchment into her lap. "Your standing is high enough to warrant entrance into one of the State Teachers' Colleges. Do you think you might like teaching?"

"But—that would cost a lot of money, Aunt Grace," Gay demurred. "You have been wonderful to me and I have saved a little, but not nearly enough for that. Even with tuition free there would be board, books and oh—lots of things. And what would you do without me?"

Grace Alden smiled. "You don't want to be a teacher, do you? I thought not," as the girl flushed guiltily. "You don't have to be, you know. Is there something else you think you would really enjoy doing?"

"Do I have to do anything?" Gay asked. "Can't I just go on as I have been doing—taking care of you? Or——"

"There's nothing I should like better—for myself, darling," the older woman told her. "But you have your own life to consider. You're young, you're clever and I think you're beautiful. You should not be tied to a cranky, crippled old maid——"

Gay sank down on the floor beside the invalid's chair and for a moment buried her head in the light blanket that lay across the crippled knees. The gray eyes she lifted at last were bright with unshed tears and she caught one of the misshapen hands in both her own.

"How can you talk like that, Aunt Grace, when you have given me the only home—the only love I have ever known? It has been heavenly here—everything I am and everything I can ever hope to become I owe to you. I can never repay you—never—never."

"There, there, child!" Miss Alden chided. "It is I who should be grateful. You brought joy, youth and sunshine into this house. You provided me with an object in life—something to do—someone to love. I don't dare think of what I might have become without you. You owe me nothing, Gay, only your love, and I have tried to earn that."

"You didn't have to earn it, Aunt Grace," the girl protested vehemently. "It was yours from the first day I saw you. Somehow I had a feeling we belonged together and I have never lost that feeling. I hope you will let me stay forever." She sprang to her feet. "Now I have a surprise for dinner tonight. No, darling, I'm not going to tell you. I'll skip up and change into something less glamorous and be down in a jiffy. Be good—tra-la-la-la—ah-ah-a-a-ah" died away as she ran up the stairs and somewhere a door shut.

All that had happened more than a year ago and life had gone smoothly on in the house at Seventeen Belfort Street.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD
• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!
Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes mostly waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, run-down feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self—full of life! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

Average Citizen Is Saving More; Sales and Profit Survey Reveals

PEACE TALKS—As home towners had expected, the 30-day provisional cease-fire-line agreement in Korea expired without final agreement between the Communists and the United Nations in their peace talks. As a result, it will be necessary to redraw the cease-fire line whenever all other armistice points are settled.

Although progress in the talks has been slow, the over-all picture is encouraging. Results are beginning to show.

First, and possibly most important, is the slackening of fighting, resulting in a great drop in the number of casualties on both sides. This policy is likely to continue as long as the talks are in progress, because, as Gen. James A. Van Fleet told correspondents: "We will not sacrifice our men needlessly. What is the use of thousands of casualties if it is questionable what good they would do?"

Second, the United States and its allies have a general idea, although somewhat inaccurate, of the number of fighting men held by the Communists in their prisoner-of-war camps. United Nations negotiators, however, are still pressing for a full accounting of more than 50,000 unlisted Allied prisoners. The U.S. has asked specifically what has become of 1,058 Americans not on the official Red prisoner-of-war list.

How soon a final agreement can be reached in the talks is anyone's guess, but distrust on the part of both sides will not hasten it. As an example, the Reds charge the lack of agreement due to "extraordinary antics . . . colossal bungling, criminal negligence, and master-race arrogance" by the Americans.

On the other hand, the Allies charge the "Communists have run true to form . . . With few exceptions the talks have been marked by the familiar Red pattern of delay, deceit, and diversionary tactics."

PRICE CUTS—Rural and small town families, by far the largest group of mail order patrons in the country, are wondering if the announced price cuts on thousands of items by the firms located in Chicago is an indication of things to come during 1952.

Midwinter sales catalogues of the four biggest mail order houses in the business list lower prices on thousands of items. It is the biggest cut in years.

One form cut the price on an 11-cubic-foot refrigerator from $262.72 to $212.75, a 25 per cent mark down on men's shirts, and price reductions ranging from 80 cents to $2.30 on tires from last fall's levels. The firm also listed 400 price cuts on both wood and metal furniture.

SALES SAG—The Securities and Exchange Commission and the Federal Trade Commission, in a report of business conditions during the last quarter of 1951, said sales in the nation dropped under the previous quarter's level for the first time since 1949. The report also said the profit sag, which began at the end of 1950, continued with manufacturers returns amounting to 15 per cent before taxes and 23 per cent after taxes. Sales fell off $2,600,000,000 during the period.

Only four of the 22 industries covered in the report recorded an increase of profits before taxes in the third quarter of last year. They were petroleum, food, tobacco, and apparel and finished textiles.

The commissions did not attempt to interpret the general decline in business. It was obvious, however, that decline was due to a consumer buying lull that started early in 1950, sharp increases in defense taxes, shortages of materials and controls on scarce metals. Most observers believe the trend can be expected to continue during the early part of this year.

THE OLD SOCK—According to Secretary of Commerce Sawyer the average citizen in the home towns of the nation are putting more and more of their money in the old sock and keeping it there. He says savings are greater now than at any time in the last five years.

Sawyer is all for this saving spree of Americans—amounting to an annual rate of $22,000,000,000—because he believes it has helped turn the tide against rampant inflation. He warned, however, that if Americans spend these savings in a new wave of buying, inflatary pressures will surge up again.

Personal incomes rose from $225,000,000,000 in 1950 to $251,000,000,000 in 1951. Now, in the early days of 1952, the rate is about $260,000,000,000.

GOP CIRCUS—The race of Republicans to secure the GOP president nomination is taking on the atmosphere of a circus—so many are joining the show that spectators are going to miss some of the acts. The latest is Harold E. Stassen. Already active are Sen. Robert Taft of Ohio and Gov. Earl Warren of California. Remaining to join the big show is Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, considered by many the white hope of the Republican party.

The other candidates had this to say of Stassen's announcement: "Every American has a right to run for President and it's well that the Republicans should have a wide choice."—Taft. "His (Stassen's) candidacy should stimulate discussion of national issues and he will undoubtedly be an important factor in the Republican convention."—Warren.

THE SUMMARY—Secretary of State Dean Acheson, whose popularity with the American people has increased since the Japanese peace conference in San Francisco, recently summed up the American foreign policy for 1951. Dividing the global picture into four sections, he had this to say:

Europe and the North Atlantic—The year 1951 was a period of progress and growth . . . The North Atlantic Treaty organization's military command has gone forward . . . The important decisions that must be made early in 1952 have to do with the quantity and quality of European military forces, German participation in the defense of Europe, and creation of a European defense community and a European army.

The Near and Middle East—We lost some ground. The Suez waterway and Iranian oil crises offer dangerous opportunities for exploitation by the Kremlin. On the other hand, Greece and Turkey are bright spots.

The Far East—In Korea, the UN must guard against a renewal of Communist treachery, even if an armistice is signed.

The Pacific—The past year was one in which progress was made toward building a structure of peace through a series of treaties with Australia, New Zealand, the Philippines, and Japan.

Officers at the Army post office in Tokyo are pictured as they started sorting some 800 letters from Red held Allied prisoners-of-war in Korea to their families. The letters were flown to the United States and then sent to families in all parts of the nation by airmail-special delivery.

EMPLOYMENT IN 1952

All-Time Peak of 63 Million Seen

Robert C. Goodwin, director of the employment security in the Labor department, has predicted that 63,000,000 Americans will have jobs during 1952, an all-time peak in the nation's history. The record now stands at 62,600,000, set in August, 1951.

Goodwin said 1951 was a year "with full employment, the highest standard of living in history, and the greatest industrial strength and capacity on record."

As for 1952 he forecast employment expansion by mass hiring in heavy industry as many industries with big defense orders complete tooling and designing stages preparatory to volume production.

He said these demands, plus the demands of agriculture, should cause the peak by midsummer.

Memoriam of O. J. Lunke

In loving memory of our dear husband and father, Ole J. Lunke, who passed away two sad years ago January 8. 1950.

Two sad lonely years today,
God called our loved one away.
Remembering his kind words, and gentle face
There will always be that vacant place
Honest and faithful in every way
His memory in our hearts will always stay
Gone, dear one, gone forever
But not forgotten, no not ever.

Sadly missed by Mrs. Ole Lunke and family

Defies Gravity

HIGH ON A POLE, power lineman Frank Sliwa leans over backward to grip a slack wire before pulling it taut with a chain puller. With today's increased use of electric power, the job of building and maintaining lines is vital. Among Minnesota's biggest electricity users is the iron mining industry—buying vast amounts as part of its annual $100 million in purchases of services, materials, supplies. And it will buy still more from Minnesota's job-providing firms if it can, through fair tax treatment, maintain Minnesota's competitive position in the iron ore market. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

Recreation

It should be remembered that recreation helps keep the family united.

Decorating Duplicators

In addition to being useful and durable, the finish on the duplicating machines used in offices must have an attractive appearance and must remain presentable over a long period of time. This finish must have good adhesion and a reasonable degree of flexibility. It should not be a "dust-catcher" and must lend itself to easy cleaning.

Sources of Uranium

The rich pitchblende deposits of the Belgian Congo and Canada's Great Bear Lake region, which supplied experimental materials for the first atom bomb, are still considered the world's outstanding uranium sources. Czechoslovakia's pitchblende from the Jachymov mines is often mentioned, along with the newly important carnotite ores of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona, and the extensive but uranium-light titanium of Arkansas.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

It's Slim's For An "Honest" Meal

Most people thought Slim Benson would probably go broke when he first started his system of letting customers figure out their own checks over at his big diner on the highway.

Slim trusts them to pay for as much as they eat—you simply tell Sally, his cashier, the amount of your bill. It works, too. Take the other day when Buck Harris told Sally his bill was 35¢.

Now I was right there with Buck and I knew all he had was coffee and pie which comes to a quarter. "How come thirty-five cents?" I asked Buck. "Had an extra cup of java the other day, Joe, and forgot all about it—'til now," he says.

From where I sit, most people are basically honest — and that goes for their opinions, too, even though they may be different than our own. I like a glass of beer with my dinner; you may prefer something else . . . but we all ought to be allowed to "figure it out" ourselves.

Evangelism Conference

Nationwide attention will be centered on Minnesota and Minneapolis this month when the eight church bodies of the National Lutheran Council Churches of the U. S. and Can. will hold their Evangelism Conference at the Minneapolis armory, January 23 to 27. The purpose of the conference will be to mobilize the lay members of the churches for evangelism. Officials report this will likely be one of the most significant events in Lutheranism since the Protestant Reformation in 1518.

"For months, hundreds of Lutheran committees have been working on this conference, and hundreds of thousands will share in the evangelism of our times" the Rev. Otto Helsa, conference publicity chairman, stated.

Members in attendance will represent two-thirds of American Lutherans, the eight bodies comprising the sponsoring churches numbering over four million persons in membership.

150 pre-conference rallies are being held in strategic Lutheran church centers, and prayer-services in the homes and 10,000 Lutheran churches throughout the nation, for this Conference. During these days, hearts and minds will be focused on the theme Share Christ Today.

Vast and challenging exhibits are being arranged. Demonstration periods and group discussions will stress the "How" of effective witnessing. Four thousand pastors and laymen are expected to register for training sessions in the techniques on Evangelism and 10,000 for the evening sessions.

74 nationally known Lutheran speakers and leaders from coast to coast, will take part on the program. Lutheran choirs from many major cities will be united in a mass chorus with approximately 3,000 voices for a concert on Sunday evening, Jan. 27.

Rev. Elmer C. Reinertson of Minneapolis is conference chairman, the Rev. Royal Lescher, of New York, conference secretary

Ed Got Red In His Own "Hot Water"

Big Ed started a "Pay-Your-Bill" campaign last week and ended up with a slightly red face. Ed's been our Water Commissioner for ten years, and for ten years now he's been getting riled up over slow payments of bills.

So, he finally decided to do something drastic about it. Last week he sent notices that if the slackers didn't pay up by Friday, he'd shut off their water.

Naturally, some still didn't square accounts. Ed ordered their water turned off, and 14 homes went without all week end—the Commissioner's among them. Seems Ed forgot to pay his bill.

From where I sit, Ed's mistake is one we all make at times. We are too quick to accuse others while forgetting our own faults. Lots of us do it, for instance, over a difference in taste for a soft drink or a friendly glass of beer. Let's respect each other's preferences and we'll all stay out of "hot water."

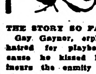
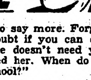
RESIDENT NURSE



A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK



THE STORY SO FAR: Gay Gaynor, orphan, with an ingrown hatred for playboy Thad Borden because he kissed her against her will, incurs the enmity of Mrs. Overton, orphanage superintendent, because she won't allow Mrs. Overton to move injured Benny Heaton until the doctor arrives. Mrs. Overton bars Gay from further shelter at the "home," forcing her to take employment as a nursemaid with Miss Alden, a semi-invalid who has applied at the orphanage for "hired help." Miss Alden, called "Aunt Grace" by Gay, turns out to be a kind, considerate lady, who learns to love Gay with a mother's affection and refuses to treat her like a servant.

CHAPTER III

And now Bill Graves was working in the tool plant and attending night school. He was growing into a fine young man, eager, ambitious and willing to make any sacrifice in order to reach his goal. He intended becoming a commercial artist and old Oscar Willets, a local cartoonist, was encouraging and helping where he could. Miss Alden enjoyed the evenings he spent with Gay in the bright living room. He didn't come often, but when he did it was a gala occasion and each time the improvement was apparent. His manner changed, and his English.

Oh, yes, Miss Alder felt her investments were paying rich dividends — such delightful dividends! But she was a little worried, too. Gay appeared completely indifferent to the opposite sex. Oh, there was Bill, of course, a year or more younger, although at seventeen nearly a head taller, but Gay treated him like a brother. It wasn't natural. She, herself, had had beaus when she was but sixteen— several beaus, but not Gay. Boys came calling—invitations arrived via telephone, messenger and even in person, but it was only occasionally the girl went out and only then because Miss Alden insisted and had invited a friend or neighbor to spend the night with her. No, Gay appeared perfectly happy and contented without boy friends and yet she was nearly nineteen—a lovely nineteen.

Life's Too Short To Bear Grudges

Doctor Borden laughed at her fears and assured the anxious foster parent that when Mr. Right appeared Gay would quickly shed her attitude of indifference to the troublesome sex and fall violently and completely in love. She was the type—according to the good doctor.

"I thoroughly dislike Thad Borden, Aunt Grace," Gay protested when the older woman tried to make her see she was hurting the doctor. "He's fresh and conceited — and hateful and I want nothing at all to do with him."

It was two days later that Thad accompanied his father when he made his usual professional visit to the Alden house. But he remained outside in the car and Gay breathed a sigh of relief. The next day, however, Thad came alone and Gay let him in. He tried to talk to her but she excused herself after showing him out to the pleasant, shaded porch where Miss Alden sat, a thin volume of verse on the reading stand before her. Thad had always been dear to Miss Grace and she exclaimed her pleasure when she saw him. He sat down close to her.

"She's still carrying a chip on her shoulder—after all these years, Miss Grace," Thad grumbled after a moment. "Life's too short to bear grudges."

"Just what is there to it, Thad?" Miss Alden asked. "Gay won't talk. What did you do to her? It must have been something pretty bad."

"It was ages ago—maybe I was sort of fresh—feeling my oats. I —I teased her and that youngster she was so crazy about and she slapped my face. Of course there was only one answer to that. I— I kissed her. Gosh, Miss Grace, that's no crime——"

"Where and when did all this happen?"

"Oh, years ago—four or five. It was at a picnic the Rotary gave the kids at Bethesda. Don't think I care a hoot, Miss Grace—only— well—anyway, I hate anyone carrying a grudge forever. Makes me feel — well — uncomfortable— like a heel, and, Miss Grace, I'm not a heel—or am I?"

Miss Alden looked grave. "I think I can see Gay's point, Thad," she told him. "After all, she was an orphan — a charity child if you will, while you were a glamour boy — popular and sought after. She knew you wouldn't have dared treat—say—Vivian Poole so summarily. And, by the way, what is this I hear of your engagement to Vivian?"

"But I meant no harm, Miss Grace," he protested, ignoring her question. "What's a kiss these days? Everyone kisses — it means absolutely nothing. She slapped my face and I retaliated. That's all there was to it — and she makes it a point to ostracize me—makes me feel like something that had just crawled out from under a stone and somehow wishes he hadn't."

Miss Alden smiled and the young man frowned. "It makes it worse because Dad thinks the world of her, Miss Grace," he went on morosely. "He's sure as anything it's all my fault—that I'm to blame."

"We-ll," Miss Alden said reasonably, "aren't you?"

"But I've tried to apologize— I've said I was sorry. Ages ago I told her that, but she treats me as if I weren't there."

"I wouldn't take it too much to heart, Thad," she told him gently. "After all, you aren't likely to see a great deal of each other. Gay won't go out much—prefers to stay with me—feels she owes it to me, which is of course nonsense. The girl owes me nothing. Anything I have ever done for her has been repaid many times over. But she has an exaggerated sense of loyalty and I am selfish enough to be glad. I love that child, Thad. I won't have her hurt — by you or anyone else. Understand?" Thad continued to scowl and again she asked about his reported engagement, but with an impatient shake of his head he brushed the question aside.

"We've discussed Gay quite enough," Miss Alden said firmly. "I refuse to say more. Forget her."

"Small - town rumors, Miss Grace," he said curtly. "Do you know anything about her family? Who her parents were — her family —her background?"

Somewhat puzzled at his persistence, Miss Alden explained all she knew. "The records were destroyed during the fire a decade and more ago. The shock killed Miss Gaynor, Gay's great-aunt, and the girl was too young at the time of her parents' death to remember much if anything about them. They were killed in a train wreck and the child brought to her only known relative who was then matron at Bethesda. Why do you ask?"

Family Background Is a Mystery

"For no particular reason," Thad murmured. "Someone asked me the other day and I had to confess I knew nothing at all about her. Hasn't anyone ever tried to discover a possible relative, Miss Grace? It isn't to be supposed that she is all stark alone in the world."

"She isn't," Miss Alden replied sharply. "She has me and——"

"I'm sorry. I meant, of course, blood relations."

"I don't think Gay cares a great deal, Thad. She is an independent girl, quite capable of looking out for herself. Circumstances have given her strength of character, poise and an intense self-respect. It hasn't been easy for her to combat the stigma with which many people so foolishly and unfairly brand those reared in an orphanage. Bethesda is neither better nor worse than the average orphans' home. There are good and bad elements in all of them—products of unfortunate marriages or broken homes, Thad. Some of our finest men and women — the ones who have made the world a little better for their having lived — were products of orphanages."

"Of course, Miss Grace," Thad assured her, "but just the same there may come a day when she might want to know——"

Miss Alden shook her head and her voice was cold as she answered. "That day will never come. Thad. Gay is a real person in her own right. I have no doubts on that score. I understand your party was a great success — that the elite of Bessemer turned out to do you honor. Your father was pleased."

"Not so very, Miss Grace. Gay refused his invitation. Why?"

"We've discussed Gay quite enough," Miss Alden said firmly. "I refuse to say more. Forget her, Thad. I doubt if you can ever be friends. She doesn't need you nor do you need her. When do you go back to school?"

"Oh, I have another year at Cornell and then I'm coming back here to intern in Memorial. Dad wangled a place for me here — wants me home, I guess. The house gets pretty lonely for him with me gone."

"Your father works much too hard, Thad," Miss Alden said. "It will be fine when you can relieve him of a part of his work. I hope you will be as good a doctor as your father."

It was quite by accident that Gay heard of Thad's engagement to Vivian Poole. Of course she had heard rumors, but Miss Alden had told her that Thad, while not denying the eventuality, had dubbed the report just a small town rumor. However, it was now, apparently, an actuality. Doctor Borden was confiding in Miss Alden and didn't seem too pleased.

"Don't get me wrong, Grace," the doctor said. "I have nothing against the girl. She's beautiful, not too dumb and her family is, perhaps, Bessemer's topnotcher. But—Thad needs someone to bring out the best in him. He's got plenty of the right kind of stuff, my dear. I should know. I'm his father. He's clever — a worker when let, but Vivian's too fond of society. I can't imagine her being satisfied with the scraps of time Thad will be able to give her, any more than I can see her contented as the wife of a small-town doctor. Somehow I have a notion Bessemer is too small to satisfy Vivian."

Doctor Can't Agree Vivian Loves Thad

"But as a specialist Thad won't be so fully occupied, will he, Doctor?" Miss Alden asked. "The specialists I know devote only certain hours to the public good. They make few if any house calls and——"

"But Thad won't be that kind of a specialist, Grace. He is interested in certain diseases, perhaps, but he is coming in with me as my associate. I've dreamed of that sign in front of my office ever since the boy made his appearance in this tough old world. BORDEN AND SON, PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS. His mother dreamed with me and we planned how when Thad married we would divide the house —make two separate apartments with our offices in the center—between the two — right where the vestibule is. Plenty of room there for us both. But after Marcia went —well, I sort of thought that perhaps Thad and his wife would let me have a room somewhere in the place and they could live right on there in the old home."

"And now?"

"Somehow, I can't imagine Vivian Poole living in my old home, Grace. In fact, I understand Sam thinks of building a place for them over on North Hill not far from his own ugly mansion. Oh, well, maybe I'm a selfish, doddering old fool to want Thad with me. After all, he must live his own life and do as he wishes. I did."

"You did not," Miss Alden said with spirit. "I happen to know that you had a splendid offer to settle in Denver, but you stayed right here in Bessemer because your father wasn't strong and needed you. Marcia managed that big house after your mother died and I believe she was a happy woman. I don't think you have ever regretted staying on. Have you, Doctor?"

The man shook his head. "Never for one moment. That's what bothers me. Marcia was a different type. She was a nurse, of course, and perhaps that made her more adaptable. Oh, well, Thad will have to work out his own problems, I suppose. But I wish——"

Gay, who had been busy putting a hem in one of her gingham housedresses, wasn't aware she had been eavesdropping until she heard Miss Alden say, "Wouldn't you like a cup of coffee, Doctor. You look tired. Gay will make you a cup in a jiffy. You sit still and I'll call her. She can't have gone far." She rang the bell on the table beside her and Gay put down her work and went to her. The doctor looked a little nonplussed and Aunt Grace said, "I thought perhaps you were upstairs or in the garden, Gay."

"No," the girl answered quite calmly, "I was in the library sewing, Aunt Grace. What is it you want?"

"Doctor Borden feels like a cup of your famous coffee, my dear, and you might make him a sandwich to go with it."

"Will you have it here, Doctor? Shall I make a cup for you, too, Aunt Grace? I can put up the card table and will have everything ready in a jiffy."

She left the room and for the first time knew a feeling of guilt. It had all been perfectly innocent and quite unintentional.

New Hazard for Dogs Found in Chemicals

It's getting to the place where city dogs just live a dog's life these days.

On top of such routine hazards as speeding motorists and dog impounders, man's best friend now has another problem to contend with.

That's the danger of winter poisoning from toxic chemicals that are used to melt snow and ice from streets and sidewalks.

These chemicals may irritate the dog's paws. Then when the dog licks the irritated areas, it may swallow enough of the chemical to cause a digestive upset.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD
• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here's why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!
Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon ... right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.
But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes mostly waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, run-down feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self — full of life! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price — still 25c, 50c or only 10c.

Nickel and Coal

Do you know that nickel plays a vital part not only in the production of coal but also in its conversion to light, heat and power? The cutters, conveyors and miners' lamps that are used in the mining of coal, the railway engines and the road vehicles concerned in its distribution, the plants converting it to steam power and electric current—in all these, nickel is present.

Background Brings Beauty

In an outstanding living room where treasured eighteenth century paintings and mahogany furniture have an exquisite setting, the walls and woodwork are painted a delicate blue. Deep cushioned divans are upholstered to match. The ceiling is painted a pale gold which is lighter in tone than the sheer gold draperies.

Golden Eyesight

The gold used in spectacle mountings adds up to a huge fortune. One manufacturer alone in ten and one half years used over 400,000 ounces of fine gold worth nearly $15,000,000. The wire that he used in the ear-loops, laid end to end, would extend 15,300 miles, or more than 80 million feet.

Saved His Surface

Prehistoric man in America almost universally used pigments of different colors to decorate his face and body. This custom is ordinarily interpreted as due to desire for adornment, but the paint may have been used for protecting the skin against the sun's rays.

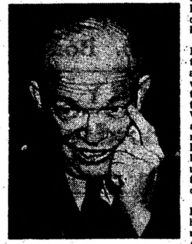
Eisenhower's Political Statement Causes Stir in Republican Circles

POLITICS— Gen. Dwight Eisenhower has made a statement that many political observers say clarifies his political intentions. It has also caused a great stir in Republican circles. The general said, in effect, that he would not make any pre-convention fight for the GOP presidential nomination. He added, however, that he has always been a Republican and that he would probably accept a clear cut call to political leadership which is the duty of every American.

Eisenhower's statement was made after he was put on something of a spot during a recent news conference by Sen. Henry Cabot Lodge, during which the senator announced he was placing the general's name on the New Hampshire Republican ballot.



GENERAL EISENHOWER

Before Lodge's news conference, Eisenhower had repeatedly refused to make any comment on his poltical aspirations. By continued silence, he would have let it be known, in a negative manner, that he was willing to take the Republican nomination. While his statement was not as clear as some would have liked, it was noted that the general did not request his name held off the New Hampshire ballot. Eisenhower has assumed a unique, if somewhat confusing, position in American politics in the eyes of the average home town voter.

Almost as startling as Senator Lodge's maneuvering and Eisenhower's statement, was the announcement by The New York Times, one of America's oldest and most influencial newspapers, that it would support the general "enthusiastically" if he becomes a candidate for President. The newspaper has supported GOP presidential candidates only twice in the past 20 years.

Said The Times in a lead editorial: "We have given our support on those occasions to the Democratic candidate essentially because we were reluctant to trust the Republican party on issues of foreign policy and because we believe these issues to be the decisive issues of the campaign, towering high above all domestic issues—for the clear and sufficient reason that without a sound and courageous foreign policy the safety, the prosperity, even the very independence of this nation would be endangered.

"In General Eisenhower we have a man who shares this conviction. We are confident that he would be able to lead even the laggards among his fellow Republicans away from isolation and toward world responsibility."

KOREA—The Korean peace talks settled down to a series of name calling, bitterness, and increasing suspicion. Although some progress has been made toward peace during the long months of talking, it is becoming more evident that a final and lasting peace can not be secured in such an atmosphere.

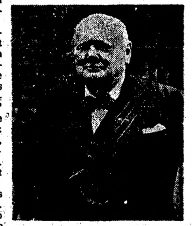
The Russians, meanwhile, indicated they wanted a greater voice in the talks to settle a war they don't even recognize, by asking for a meeting of the United Nations security council to consider the armistice negotiations. The proposal was rejected at once by the United States, Great Britain and France. American officials said such a session—where Russia has a veto—would worsen the prospect of peace in Korea by bringing political issues into the negotiations.

ECONOMY—Charles E. Wilson, director of defense mobilization, has predicted a severe pinch in civilian goods for the first three months of this year. The prediction was made in Wilson's annual report of rearmament under the national emergency program.

He predicted: (1) Materials for consumer goods in general in the first three months of 1952 are sharply reduced from the levels of the first quarter of 1951. On the basis of present calculations the second quarter allotments will be even tighter; (2) Requirements of the military and atomic-energy programs for most materials will either continue at the same levels throughout 1952 or rise slightly; (3) After military and atomic energy needs are met in such strategic materials as steel, aluminum, and copper, the material remaining will be divided between industrial expansion, consumer goods, public services, limited export requirements, and stockpiling.

As for the past year, Wilson termed it one of great progress, but said more could have been accomplished.

CHURCHILL— Winston Churchill, who will go down in history as one of the great men of our times, arrived in the United States for a series of huddles with President Truman and top military brass. Mr. Churchill's agenda was almost as magnificent as his personal appearance. It included everything from economic aid to plans for joint defense of the west.



WINSTON CHURCHILL

The key to the talks was quickly revealed when President Truman met the 77-year-old Prime Minister at a Washington airport. Said the President: "I can't tell you when I have had more pleasure than I have this morning in welcoming you as a visitor to the United States of America." Replied Mr. Churchill, with the force and clarity of the Roosevelt days: "We have only to go along together, each doing loyally his best to understand the other's point of view . . . and we shall find ourselves safe at the end of the road."

There followed a series of meetings between the President and Mr. Churchill, and Mr. Churchill and top military brass. The complete results of these talks may not be known for years, but it is evident they have resulted in closer cooperation between the two countries. Churchill, no doubt, has received assurances of economical help so badly needed by Great Britain. Whether or not Britain will join in the European defense army with greater enthusiasm than previously indicated has not been announced. Most observers believed that was one of the Prime Minister's bargaining points.

SCANDALS—The second session of the 82nd congress had been in session just a few hours when it became evident the nation is in for more months of spectacular investigation.

In the senate and house there were committees and subcommittees in every corner screaming for more investigations of corruption in high places, income tax frauds, murder, and underworld activities. It was evident, too, that there would be more investgations of Communists in government and defense industries.

Meanwhile, Attorney General J. Howard McGrath continues his new offensive against organized crime in the nation. McGrath's drive started after Treasury department agents swooped down on suspected narcotic offenders and arrested more than 500 persons.

It was evident the two drives were a part of the administration's announced plan to clean up crime and graft. But in the eyes of most home towners, the administration's campaign is a little like locking the barn door after the horse has been stolen.

FARM ELECTION STRATEGY

Democrats May Stand Pat on Farm Policy

According to reports circulating around Washington, the administration is unlikely to change its farm policy in the face of the approaching presidential campaign. The strategy, observers are reporting, will be to concentrate on the claim that a Republican victory in 1952 would endanger existing benefits of the farm program, and sidetracking any controversial issues that might arise.

Democratic advisors point out that the plan worked well in 1944 and 1948. In 1949 the administration pushed the Brannan plan which would have made much greater use of federal subsidies to maintain agricultural prosperity. National farm organizations put up stiff resistance to the plan and it failed to get approval of the congress.

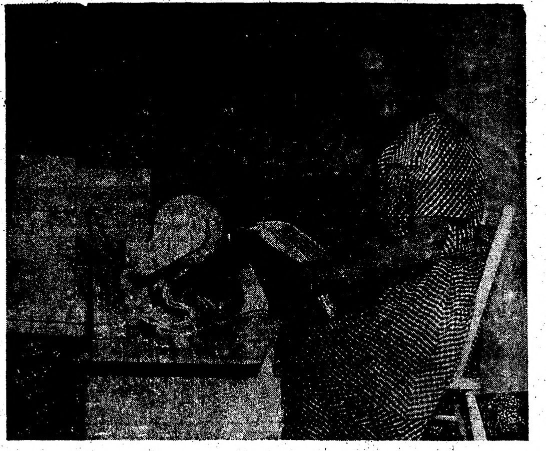
Has To Watch His Temper

HIS DISPOSITION is good, but Richard Johnson's job is watching the "temper" or moisture content of wheat about to become flour. This moisture tester helps him in the big Minneapolis mill where he works. Who buys the flour, meat and other foods produced in Minnesota? Trainloads are bought and consumed on Minnesota's iron ranges. In fact, the thousands of ore miners, enjoying a $50 million annual payroll, are real customers of most Minnesota industries. The iron mining industry can be an even larger customer if fair treatment allows normal development of all ore deposits —high grade and low grade—and encourages the maintenance of Minnesota's position in the iron ore field.



Electric Ironer Cuts Labor Time in Half, Says Homemaker

"I like my new electric ironer because it is fast," says Mrs. Dan Powers, who lives 4 miles south of Langdon, North Dakota. "I believe I have cut my ironing time in half since I started using it."

The Powers, who are members of the Cavalier Rural Electric Cooperative, recently moved into their new farm home, and the ironer is just one of many electric appliances they have installed.

"It's so easy to iron," Mrs. Powers continues. "Sometimes I just think I'll sit down and iron and rest. Another thing I like about it is that I can iron so many things I never did up before —and finish them easily."

Mrs. Powers is just one of many thousands of rural homemakers who are finding electricity their greatest helper. They use electricity not only for ironing, but for cooking, washing dishes, drying clothes and for a score of other jobs around the home.

Like Mrs. Powers, these homemakers like electricity because it is fast, efficient, clean, economical, dependable and safe. It saves time, saves work and saves money . . . and it definitely makes farm living PERMANENTLY BETTER.

See your home town electric dealer soon. Let him show you about the electric ironer and many other electric conveniences. Once you do your work the electric way, you'll never do it the old way again.

Eastern Marshall County Announces Decision to Seek Legislative Position.

Roy E. Wiseth, Moylan township farmer in eastern Marshall county, has announced he will file for the office of state representative from the 67th legislative district representing Marshall county. Before making his decision Mr. Wiseth spent a month contacting various leaders thruout the county to determine his support.

Mr. Wiseth is 51 years old, was born in North Dakota in 1900 and came to Moylan township (between Grygla and Goodridge) with his parents in 1904. He started farming in the same neighborhood in 1925 and has made his home there ever since.

Mr. Wiseth has served on many co-op boards and committees including the Marshall Co. School Survey Committee, State and Local Land Use Planning Committee, Minnesota Rural Rehabilitation Board, local PMA committee, town board, school board, creamery board, Farmers Co-op Elevator, Farmers Union Oil Co. board, one year as state president of the Minnesota Farmers Union, and other organizations.

Fluff Harvest on in Mud Lake

Local residents have been engaged in harvesting cattail fluff on the Mud Lake Refuge. The cattail plant is operated by Ness Typha Co. and an increased demand for the processed fluff has kept the plant operating two shifts.

Fluff pickers obtain permits from the refuge office (they must confine all their picking to refuge lands, once they obtain a permit) enter the refuge at designated locations, and harvest the fluff by stripping the heads and placing the fluff in burlap bags.

The fluff is weighed in at the local plant, each picker paid 3c per pound with ½c per pound held out as a refuge permit fee, which is eventually paid into the U. S Treasury.

This project is another example of the extensive and varied uses and benefits derived from the Federal Wildlife Refuges.

The cattail marshes provide necessary habitat for the 20,000-40,000 waterfowl annually produced on Mud Lake Refuge, they also provide food and shelter for the annual production of from 5,000 to 10,000 muskrats, and are otherwise greatly utilized by numerous species of waterbirds for nesting and cover purposes.

It is gratifying to obtain additional use of the dead cattail plants by harvesting the fluff, and thereby adding a cash revenue to the income of local residents, while not in the least disturbing the biology of the marshes and its value for production of wildlife.

As of Dec. 31 a total of 20,000 pounds of fluff have been harvested from refuge marshes. It is expected that an additional 50,000 pounds will be taken to fill the requirements of the local processing plant.

Mrs. A. Wikstrom underwent a major operation at Thief River Falls Thursday.

Deputy Collectors Anglim and Brown will be at the Municipal building in Thief River Falls on Feb. 1 through 8, Feb. 15 and March 3 through 15, 1952. (except Saturdays and Sundays) from 9:00 a. m. to 4:30 p. m., to assist taxpayers with the filing of current federal income tax returns.

Gypsum Plentiful

Gypsum has been exploited commercially in the United States since 1835, when the J. B. King Company of New York, N.Y., imported gypsum rock from Nova Scotia. Subsequently, large gypsum deposits were discovered throughout the United States, particularly in Western New York state, Northern Ohio, Michigan, Iowa, Texas, California and Kansas. Gypsum is used extensively in building because of its fire-resistive qualities.

More Light for Less Money

To keep the reflector surface on fluorescent lights from yellowing—so the maximum amount of light is always maintained—industrial finish engineers developed a special mar-proof, baked finish that keeps its original whiteness and light reflectivity. As a consequence, users get more illumination from fluorescent lights—with less electricity.

Sea Unicorn

The narwhal is called the sea unicorn because of the long, spiral and tapered tuck that grows from its upper jaw. This is sometimes as long as ten feet. Its purpose has never been determined. Ironically, the tusk is often fashioned into a harpoon used in the hunting of these sea animals.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon... right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes mostly waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, run-down feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self—full of life! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price—still 25c, 50c or only 10c.

Truman's State of Union Speech Termed Friendly, Conciliatory

STATE OF THE UNION—Was it a wiser or politically minded President who delivered the state of the union message to the second session of the 82nd congress? Was his conciliatory and friendly mood dictated by the fact that 1952 is an election year, or was it an effort to consolidate the majority behind the defense program and the nation's foreign policy? These questions have been in the minds of every American since the President's speech.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN

For the first time in five years, President Truman, who is beginning to show the strain of his years as chief executive, did not go all-out for welfare-state legislation. He made it clear, however, that he was not abandoning any of the things he has advocated since 1946. Rather, he would have the country concentrate its full efforts to defense and keeping economically sound.

In this respect he said the stabilization law was shot full of holes at the last session and "it will be one of the main tasks before congress to repair the damage and enact a strong anti-inflation law". As for defense, he warned that the situation in Korea remains dangerous and that "the Soviet Union is increasing its armed might." The world still walks in the shadow of another world war, he said.

But his approach to taxation, compulsory health insurance, civil rights, and other controversial issues was so amiable that it left many Republican critics speechless. In fact, Republicans, who obviously were all set for a field day of criticism, found little about which to demonstrate.

The main criticism, when it was all over, was the charge that the speech was just a rehash of past messages. Generally, Democrats praised the message. But from the opposition came such statements as: "The same broken record . . ." "The President's speech could be characterized as follows: spend more, waste more, socialize more, give more away, control more, talk more, and blame the other fellow for all the ills of the United States and the world."

The fire and stubborn fight of the Truman of old was so obviously lacking that it seemed almost apathetic to many home towners who heard the address.

PRODUCTION—Production of civilian goods for the second quarter of 1952 has been cut back sharply. Defense Mobilizer Charles E. Wilson announced the government has ordered home building slashed by 23 per cent for the months of April, May and June. Automobile output was slashed by 7 per cent and other consumer goods using scarce materials were trimmed 10 per cent.

This is the general picture for the second quarter:

Construction—Home building, now at a rate of 850,000 a year, will be slashed to a rate of 660,000. Only factories vitally needed for defense production will be built, and little material will be available for office buildings, stores, and other commercial construction.

Autos—The industry will get enough copper and aluminum to make 800,000 cars and enough steel to make 900,000.

Civilian Goods—Most consumer goods, including refrigerators, stoves, washing machines, television sets, and radios, will be cut by about 10 per cent from the first quarter.

Railroad Equipment—Freight car production will be redused about 14 per cent below the 20,000-car output for the first quarter.

Roads—Only the most urgent road building will be permitted.

Ships—Allotments to the Maritime Administration will be increased.

TAX EVADERS—The Treasury department has launched a new policy that should receive wide approval of the average home town tax payer. The Treasury will no longer let tax evaders escape criminal prosecution if they voluntarily confess their fraud and pay up.

The department also took steps to speed up its prosecution of tax evaders, including: (1) Reducing the number of conferences with taxpayers about their cases, although taxpayers still will be heard when necessary to develop actual facts; (2) The only persons who can represent taxpayers in these conferences must have duly certified powers of attorney to speak for the taxpayer.

The new policies are expected to reduce the lag in prosecution from an average of 292 days to about 100, it was estimated by the Treasury department.

PEACE TALKS—The Korean peace talks remain deadlocked over the question of whether or not the Communists be allowed to build airfields in North Korea during an armistice. The Reds insist that any ban on rehabilitation of combat airfields would infringe on North Korean sovereignty by interfering in internal affairs. On the other hand, the United Nations says it will not make a peace that gives the Communists the right to build up military forces and installations for further aggression.

At home, Gen. Omar Bradley, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, reports he is hopeful for a workable truce in Korea, but there is one price we won't pay—appeasement.

CLEANUP—President Truman's long awaited plan to clean up graft in government is under way, although it drew considerable fire from Republican critics.

The President dropped his plan for a special commission and handed the job to Attorney General McGrath. Republicans immediately began their criticism. The general charge was that "a whitewash is coming".

The President did not indicate how extensive the clean-up measures will go. A number of administration leaders are known to want action which would remove the corruption in government issue as far as possible from the approaching presidential election campaign.

Truman first asked Federal Judge Thomas F. Murphy of New York to head a cleanup commission. Murphy withdrew before his appointment could be announced officially. What caused him to change his mind has not been made public.

THE NATION'S SCHOOLS

Rearming Brakes U.S. School Gains

The nation's schools are again facing a serious crisis, brought on by four major factors: increased enrollments, inflationary costs, lack of building materials and an acute teacher shortage.

Educators, however, contend that the nation's economy is strong enough to support the defense program and the schools. And they insist that schools are the first line of our defense.

A recent survey revealed that 3,500,000 elementary and high school children—one out of eight pupils in the public schools—are suffering an impaired education because of inadequate facilities.

An estimated 400,000 boys and girls are not getting a full school day—some are attending school on triple-session schedules.

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: Gay Gayner, orphan, employed and maternally loved by "Aunt Grace" Alden, puzzles her benefactor with her apparent apathy toward the opposite sex. Gay inadvertently overhears "Aunt Grace" and Dr. Borden discussing the engagement of Thad Borden, the doctor's son and Vivian Poole. Gay dislikes Thad because of the arrogant and masterful kiss he planted on her lips several years before at an orphans' picnic, where he was an intruder. Unknown to her, Thad has become remorseful over the way he insulted her, but resents the tenacity with which she holds a grudge. Dr. Borden seems displeased by his son's engagement.

CHAPTER IV

The doctor eyed her from time to time and at last said, "I suppose you heard the news, Gay?"

"Of Thad's engagement to Vivian Poole? It wasn't news to me, exactly. I've been sort of expecting it—I guess everyone has. Were you surprised, Doctor?"

"Well, no, not entirely. Of course they have known each other from infancy—practically. It may work out all right."

"And why shouldn't it? She's beautiful and—popular——"

"Of course," the doctor agreed and put down his empty cup as he got to his feet.

Gay went to the door with him and when she returned she said, a bit curiously, "Just what was bothering him, Aunt Grace? He seems sort of upset about something. It can't be the engagement—he must have known that was coming for some time past."

Aunt Grace shook her head. "Vivian is a far different girl from Marcia—Thad's mother, Gay. I think the doctor fears she won't make Thad happy."

"And what about Thad making her happy, Aunt Grace?" Gay inquired with spirit. "Why worry about him?"

Miss Alden smiled. "You're still holding no briefs for Thad, are you, Gay? But you see, my dear, his father and I happen to be rather fond of the boy. We don't know Vivian so well."

Vivian's Insults Are Not Easily Forgiven

"I think I remember Mrs. Borden, Aunt Grace," Gay said musingly. "She used to come to Bethesda occasionally. I remember once she put her arm around me and told me always to stand tall. It puzzled me for a long time—I didn't know just why she should have said that. I was a tall, gangling girl—all legs and arms—not at all prepossessing."

"Marcia was a kind woman, Gay. The doctor is like her—in a way. I think Thad will settle down after a while into something of the same mold."

"I doubt it," Gay replied, "although with such wonderful parents it would seem he should develop into a good doctor."

"You know, my dear, I'm rather surprised at this engagement. If it had happened before Vivian went off to Madame Geddes I think it would have seemed more reasonable. But a fashionable finishing school can do something to a girl, I don't know —— Of course she was always vain—always spoiled—being an only child of elderly parents, but she was friendly with most people and more or less democratic."

"How can you say that, Aunt Grace?" the girl cried, her face flaming suddenly. "She never missed a chance to embarrass me. I tried to ignore her slurs—her audibly whispered 'Here comes Bethesda. Keep your distance, kids, if you don't want to catch germs. Mama says——' but I never heard exactly what Mama said, although I can imagine."

"You poor child!" Miss Alden cried, her voice and eyes indignant. "I wish I had adopted you while I was well and strong, Gay. We could have had such good times together—then."

"We're having them now, darling," the girl told her, her anger forgotten. "I suppose in a way, all that was good for me. Discipline that I needed to keep me on an even keel. But I don't like Vivian Poole and I never shall."

"Have you ever considered becoming a trained nurse, Gay?" Doctor Borden asked one day during a professional call at the house on Belfort Street. "I believe you'd make a fine one."

"I have wondered about that, Doctor," Aunt Grace said. "She could train right here in Bessemer Memorial, couldn't she?"

"Of course, if she would prefer that," the doctor said. "But personally, I would suggest some other hospital—possibly in Boston, New York or Philadelphia. I feel sure it would be easier——"

"Easier, Doctor? A big hospital? Why do you say that?" Miss Alden's eyes widened in surprise. She knew Bessemer Memorial was the apple of Doctor Borden's eye.

"I'll speak frankly if I may," he began, noticeably embarrassed. "You see——"

"Don't say another word," Miss Alden interrupted, her lips firm. Gay smiled. "No, Doctor Borden, you may stop right there. I know what you are going to say. I'm a Bethesda product, therefore would not be welcome on the staff of our local hospital. Right?"

"Okay, okay. I just thought I'd make the suggestion, my dear. No offence intended."

"And none taken," Gay smiled. "But let me tell you something, my friend. If I ever decide to enter training school, it will be in Bessemer Memorial. If, of course, they will accept me, and I think they will. I like the nurses there—they are kind. And I like the Chief of Staff, Doctor Cushing. He's a splendid surgeon, isn't he?"

"I wonder what brought that on," she asked when the doctor had gone. "I haven't the least intention of training to become a nurse, you know. I feel I'm competent enough to take care of you, darling, and that's all I care about."

"Have you ever considered becoming a trained nurse, Gay?" Doctor Borden asked one day during a professional call at the house on Belfort Street.

"But I won't be here forever, my dear," Miss Alden pointed out. "I'm not a young woman and I'm far from well—we both know that. I think the doctor was considering your future. He has always been interested in you, you know."

"Don't let's cross bridges until we come to them, Aunt Grace," Gay pointed out. "I'm staying right here until you get tired of me and send me packing."

"No danger of that," Miss Alden smiled affectionately.

And so another year passed—a busy, happy one for Gay, although her heart was often heavy as she watched her beloved foster mother slowly lose ground. It was seldom that she left her alone even for an hour and while Miss Alden was not in much physical pain, she had grown increasingly helpless, so that Doctor Borden urged that a nurse of some sort or at least a strong woman be employed to help Gay move her. And as if in answer to the need, Myra Welles quit her job at Bethesda.

"Too many bosses," she complained to Gay. "The General hired a man cook and his wife to help him."

Aunt Grace Employs Old Friend of Gay's

"The General?" Gay asked.

"That's what we call her—the matron. Even the kids call her that. She has rules for everything—we thought the Madame was nuts but this dame has her beat forty ways for Sunday."

"But what were you supposed to do, Myra?" Gay asked.

"Me? Oh, I was supposed to do the vegetables and clean up afterwards. Not me, Gay. I'm a cook. I don't mind helping out with other jobs occasionally. I like to keep busy, but I'll be hanged if I'll be bossed by a broken-down old hash-house derelict calling himself a chef, just because Miss Powell wants a man in the kitchen. No siree. I can get me a job tomorrow if I want one." She stared inquiringly at Gay who was cleaning silver. "You don't, by any chance, need a cook here, do you?"

From the bedroom came the sound of Miss Alden's bell and Gay moved quickly to answer it.

"It's nothing, my dear," the invalid murmured. "I thought I heard voices and I wondered if it was someone who might help you get me up. I wish you would listen to me, Gay. You really must have help. I shall insist and have Doctor Borden send someone if you won't hire a woman yourself. Why won't you be reasonable? It isn't as if I couldn't afford it. I have more than enough to take care of us."

"It's Myra Welles, Aunt Grace," Gay told her, her face beaming with the idea that at last the problem of extra help was solved. She liked Myra—they could work together beautifully. "She has quit her job at Bethesda — too many bosses, she says is the reason. Could you stand two products of Bethesda, Aunt Grace?"

"Will you send her in, my dear? I should like to talk with her for a minute—alone, if you don't mind."

Gay left the room and sent Myra to the invalid. After a few minutes came the sound of Myra's hearty laugh and the softer tones of Aunt Grace as she joined in the joke, whatever it was. Suddenly the swing door to the kitchen opened and Aunt Grace's wheel chair came through. Myra beamed from behind it.

"You've got yourself a helper, Gay," she laughed. "Good thing I brought along my box. But I have a notion I'll get me some new uniforms now. Some real fancy ones. This is going to be the best job I ever had."

"Welcome, Myra!" she said. "There's no one else I could possibly bear sharing Aunt Grace with. We'll take care of her together—we'll spoil her and pamper her and baby her until she begs for mercy. How does the prospect sound to you, darling?"

Vivian and Thad Break Engagement

The advent of Myra Welles changed things considerably in the Alden menage. For one thing, Gay had time on her hands. Myra insisted on doing the bulk of the work in addition to taking complete charge of the meals. Gay spent almost all of her time with the invalid. Doctor Borden was pleased with the arrangement and urged Gay to take advantage of her leisure to get out more. But the girl refused to leave her beloved charge for more than the briefest of trips to the market, the library or the shops. Miss Alden's friends marveled at the girl's devotion. After all, Gay was young and attractive. How was it that she seemed quite contented to remain tied to the invalid's apron strings, especially since Myra Welles did practically all of the work? But Gay ignored their criticism and advice. She knew what she wanted and did it.

It was during that summer word reached them that the engagement between Vivian Poole and Thad Borden was off. It seemed that while Vivian was visiting in Bar Harbor at the home of one of her former schoolmates she had met a fashionable portrait painter who was "doing" the members of her particular set and Vivian had sat for him. Not only that; they had fallen madly in love and now rumor had it they were to be married in the fall.

"Somehow I never thought the Poole-Borden affair would come off, Grace," a visitor to the Alden home said. "I remember telling Marian Burdick as much—oh, more than a year ago—when I first heard it. I could never feature Vivian Poole as a small-town doctor's wife. Too flighty. She certainly is nothing at all like Marcia and I always had a hunch Doctor Borden didn't approve. I wonder how Thad took his conge, Grace. Have you heard?"

"No," Miss Alden answered. "I haven't heard. I doubt if his heart is broken. After all, he's a busy man right now. Perhaps that accounts for his interning in New York instead of Bessemer as he and his father planned. How are Sam and Sara taking it, Jennie? It must have been a big disappointment to them, they were both fond of Thad."

"Not at all well, Grace," the visiter said. "But as my husband says: No one can live another's life for him. Just between you and me, my dear, I think Thad Borden's a lucky chap." She laughed gleefully at her frank cattiness and got to her feet. "Madame Geddes certainly made great changes in our town belle, didn't she? I don't imagine we shall be seeing much of her after the wedding. But I doubt if Bessemer will sink into oblivion because of it. Why don't you stop me, Grace? Now's your chance to cry 'me-ow!' I deserve it, but Vivian Poole has never been a favorite of mine. Now I've told all the gossip I'll run along. Give my love to Gay, Grace. Tell her she might do worse than set her cap for Thad, herself. She'd be just the wife for him."

She went out laughing and Grace Alden was glad that Gay wasn't there to hear that last. She smiled somewhat guiltily because both she and the doctor had voiced much the same sentiment—albeit quite out of hearing of Gay.

And then came one of those days that every so often bless early October when summer and autumn meet and in lingering ecstasy embrace parting forever. The sun was brilliant; the air warm yet invigorating; the trees still untouched by frost, while asters and chrysanthemums with a few last gladioli flaunted their wealth in every yard along Belfort Street. Gay's feet scarcely touched the ground as she hurried along in the clear October sunshine. A little song of pure youthful joy welled up in her heart. Aunt Grace was feeling so much better and oh, it was good to be alive on this georgeous morning!

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Good Tackle Pays

A "believe-it-or-not" story about the Ocean City reel and Montague rod (pictured), inseparable companions for nearly 30 years, is told by a famous Hollywood cameraman who fishes along the lower coast of California.

One day the cameraman and a friend were fishing side by side, using anchovies for bait. The cameraman's friend put his rod and reel down on a piling, headed for the bait shack to get hot coffee. The rest of this exciting tale follows in the cameraman's own words:

Rod Goes Overboard

"Suddenly something hit his line, and before I could grab his rod, the darned think went overboard and started for China.

Both good as ever.

"We dragged the bottom for hours, but couldn't find it. My friend was furious and blamed me for not saving his gear. About three months later a terrific storm hit Redondo Beach . . . broke up homes, tore up streets and demolished many piers. After the storm it was hard to do any surf fishing because of the huge quantities of kelp. However, I decided to give it a try. I made a cast way out and started to reel in. I had snagged on to something . . . and in came the rod and reel we had lost.

"Of course the reel was full of sand, verdigris and marine encrustations. My friend took one look at the reel and said I could keep it.

Reel Performance Excellent

I later soaked it in a full can of kerosene for a week. Then I took the whole thing apart and scrubbed every piece. I reassembled the reel and it has worked normally through all the years. Only adjustment was made 15 years ago when I sent it back for new washers. You'd never guess how much use and abuse that reel has taken and how many fish it has pulled in.

"The rod has been rewrapped, but even after all these years it still will match anything of its kind. Last job of this combination was in August, when it brought in a 27 and 33 pound chinook salmon off the Farallones."

Start Right

Before you try stunt shooting, learn how to hit the bull's eye of a stationary target. You'll make greater progress.

That advice comes from Charles Edward Chapel, a top authority on guns and shooting, in his latest book, "Simplified Rifle Shooting."

In a chapter on moving tragets and fancy shooting, Chapel tells how the graduate marksman can accomplish some of the best-known stunts of the exhibition shooters. Line drawings detailing several of the stunts were supplied for the new book by Winchester Repeating Arms Company.

Wait For Apex

"Beginners shooting at a moving target make the mistake of following the target back and forth with the rifle," writes the author of seven standard books for shooters.

The correct procedure, Chapel continues, is to catch the swinging target at one end of the swing at the point where it reverses direction.

Nymph? No Sinker

Don't use a sinker fishing a natural nymph unless you have to. The sinker interferes with the action imparted by the current and makes it harder to feel a strike. Don't let your nymph sink to the bottom and lie there. Keep it moving, fairly close to the bottom, and if it settles down, lift it up and start it again.

All lies in riffles are good spots to fish a nymph. The spots behind bars, rocks, in breaks and in the current eddies are good.

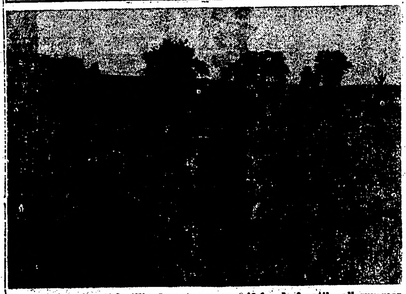
Higher Per Acre Yields Cut Bushel Cost Help Combat 5-Fold Rise in Farm Expenses



Forty acres of well-fertilized pasture carry 40 head of cattle all summer long on Ed Reeser farm near Watkins, Minn.

FARM expenses that have increased 5-fold in the past 10 years can be combatted by building up a greater volume of business through increased crop production per acre, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

The committee cites a recent study by Paul Robbins, Purdue University agricultural economist, which shows that average farm expense has risen from about $3,000 annually in the 1935 period to about $15,000 in 1950. Robbins based his analysis on operating accounts kept by 600 Indiana farmers.

The answer to keeping costs down, Robbins stated, lies in increasing yields per acre and perhaps operating more land to create a sufficient volume of business to keep men and machines fully employed.

The committee points out that a cheap way to increase the volume of farm business is by the greater use of fertilizer. Plant food, it says, costs only 50 to 60 per cent more today, than it did 10 years ago, whereas the cost of many other commodities has risen two or three times above their prewar levels.

Good soil management methods including the use of fertilizer can help boost the average yields of major farm crops from 50 to 100 per cent in most states.

Robbins' survey shows that farmers have seven to eight times more cash invested in equipment than they did 10 years ago. Labor costs have risen steadily, but have been balanced to some extent by increased mechanization of farm work, more efficient use of labor and increased crop yields.

Watches His Figures

TIMBER WORKER- Bill Smolich carefully estimates the board foot content of this log—destined for use in an underground iron mine. Thousands of logs are used yearly by Minnesota's iron mining industry—one reason why underground mining is three times as costly as open-pit operations. But the mining companies must carry on this expensive job, along with extensive treatment of low-grade ore, to make the most of the remaining supply. Fair tax treatment on all ores would help them take the next step in ore conservation —processing iron-bearing taconite rock. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to

REMOVE WASTE —NOT— GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes,—here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon .. right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes mostly waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, run-down feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self—full of life! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price — still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR:

Dr. Borden implies to Gay Gaynor, orphan in the employ of kind and considerate Grace Alden, a semi-invalid, that he will help her gain admittance to Bessemer Memorial Hospital for nurse's training. Gay is fond of Dr. Borden, but can express only contempt for the doctor's son, Thad Borden, engaged to the town debutante, Vivian Poole. Thad is "guilty" of kissing Gay against her will several years ago, gaining her unyielding dislike. Gay fears the hospital will not accept an orphan on its staff, and she dislikes to leave her benefactor who is growing weaker every day. She postpones making a decision so she can devote her time to "Aunt Grace."

CHAPTER V

She turned at the corner and walked up the hill to Foster Avenue and on to Main Street where the shops were always inviting and before whose windows she so often lingered to feast her eyes, but not this morning. She was on her way to market.

No, sir! It must be at least an inch thick—with plenty of tender meat in the center surrounded by a thin border of fat and a slim bone which Myra would decorate with a lovely white frill and, if she was lucky, she might even find a jar of mint jelly at Proudfits', the special brand Aunt Grace had confessed she liked.

She passed the florist shop and paused for a moment to see what new arrangements Mr. Flint had dreamed up to beguile the unwary.

"Who is that girl?" a slim young man demanded of the woman sitting in the parked limousine before Maurice's—Bessemer's most fashionable hat shop. "Such grace! Such glowing beauty! I must paint her. Tell me—do you know her, Madame?" The man turned to watch the hurrying figure.

Adrian Is Amazed By Gay's Beauty

"Of course I don't know her, Adrian," Mrs. Poole said crossly. She had forgotten her lorgnette and could see nothing farther away than the end of her rather long nose. "I'm sure I can't be expected to know every ragtag and bobtail in this absurd town."

"How right you are, dear lady," the young man murmured, eyeing his hostess through lowered lids. "And here is our charming Vivian. Was the visit a huge success, my sweet?"

Vivian Poole pouted. "No, it wasn't," she said. "That stupid Gladys went to a dance last night and caught cold—or something. Consequently my hat lies there just as I left it yesterday—not a stitch put into it. I have half a mind to cancel the order, Mama?" It was a question and the plump, tightly corseted matron groaned as if in agony.

"Oh, don't do that, darling. I'll speak to Maurice myself. I'm sure he will see that you receive your hat at once." She made a move to leave the car but her daughter prevented.

"Don't bother, Mama. I'll wear the large black. Adrian adores me in that, don't you, darling? Oh-h-!" For the young man's gaze was fixed on the tall, vivid, hatless girl who was again passing. She appeared entirely unaware of the occupants of the big black limousine and paused for a brief moment to look at the single creation displayed in the window of Maurice's Hat Shoppe.

"Gorgeous!" breathed the young man. "Such hair——"

"Why, Adrian! That's a Bethesda girl!" Vivian exclaimed in a tone of shocked incredulity.

"And so?" Adrian asked, puzzled.

"Don't tell me you admire that type," his fiancee cried.

"Her coloring—yes," he replied almost apologetically. "Her freshness, youth, verve——"

"Don't make me laugh," Vivian interrupted crossly.

"Very well," he said hastily. "I will not. Now where do we go from here? The light is good—I should be at work. Can we not go directly home? Or is there more shopping to do?"

"No," his fiancee replied frowning. "I've done all the shopping I intend doing in this place. We'll be leaving in a day or two and I can finish in New York. Imagine!" she exclaimed suddenly. "Mama, she went into Flint's. She should be with Miss Alden."

"I'm sure I haven't the least notion, my pet. It may be she is planning to sell some of Miss Alden's glads. But of course I wouldn't know."

"Miss Alden?" the young man murmured. "Have I met her-"

"Not likely," Vivian laughed. "Miss Grace is an invalid—tied to a wheel chair. She's a retired school teacher—we all had a term or two with her before she retired. She's not too bad—as old-maid school teachers go, darling. But I was glad the parents saw the light and sent me to Madame Geddes." She sighed, then brightened. "If I hadn't left this deadly place I should never have met you."

"And the wishes of your parents would doubtless have been realized," her mother pointed out with unaccustomed grimness.

Vivian laughed again and her fiancee looked puzzled. These strange people were always hinting. Sometimes they made him quite uncomfortable.

Frances Gaynor bought her nosegay of violets and together with her other purchases hurried back to the house on Belfort Street. Everything was going to work out just as she planned. She and Aunt Grace were to have a party.

"Hi, Aunt Grace!" she called. "I'm back."

"So soon?" the invalid asked in surprise. "Why, it seems to me you had scarcely left. Did you ride by any chance? Or have you some secret method of marketing?"

Gay went on to the kitchen where she left her packages, assuring Myra that she, herself, would set the table with Aunt Grace's favorite china and get everything in readiness for the one o'clock luncheon. She held up the violets for Myra to smell and the older woman breathed deeply of their fragrance before turning away to go on with the more mundane preparations.

She sighed, then brightened. "If I hadn't left this deadly place I should have never met you."

Gay gathered the necessary paraphernalia and returned to the living room. Aunt Grace looked up from her book.

"Darling!" she exclaimed as the girl stood before her. "You look the embodiment of youth. Your cheeks are roses, your eyes stars."

Gay laughed merrily. "I've inspired people to do a lot of things, Aunt Grace," she said demurely, "but never poetry. I'm just not the type. Getting hungry, darling? Now don't you dare tell me you're not." We're having a party—just us two—right before the fire. I'll bring in another chunk of wood and set the table just the way I want it. Have you ever been blindfolded, Aunt Grace? No? Then I think when we're quite ready to bring in the things, I'll blindfold you."

Aunt Grace Enjoys Her Last Happiness

Miss Alden smiled. "What a child you are, my dear! All right, bring on your blindfold. Surprises are fun!"

Gay's face saddened as she left the room for a moment. "What should she do when her beloved foster mother was no longer with her? How would she go on living without the tenderness, the affection that Aunt Grace had given her unstintingly all these years? She blinked rapidly. No tears. This was to be a gala occasion. She went to the kitchen where Myra was already preparing the food.

"I know, I know, Gay," Myra cried at last. "You trot along. I'll have everything ready by one o'clock sharp. You don't have to worry about anything. Go and keep Miss Grace company. I'm going to put on a clean uniform and a new cap—just for the occasion. Think she'll notice?"

"Of course she will and be pleased, too. Do you know, Myra, I think you're one of the nicest people I know. I love you."

"I love you, too, honey," Myra told her, "but just the same I wish you'd make yourself scarce."

Gay laughed and left Myra to her own devices. Honestly, since Myra came Gay found scarcely enough work to keep her busy. The hall clock warned for the hour and she caught up a napkin and prepared to blindfold Miss Alden. The table looked lovely and Gay brought in the violets loosely arranged in a low white pottery basin and placed them beside the invalid's plate. She saw the sensitive nostrils quiver for a moment, although she said nothing. When everything was on the table, Gay removed the napkin from her eyes and was repaid by the look of delight on the woman's thin face.

"Oh, darling!" she cried. "Where did you get them—those violets? Here, let me hold them—for just—a—little while. 'm'm'! You beauties! How did you know—Gay—that violets are forever associated with the happiest time of my life? I didn't think anyone knew. This is a feast in itself—just to have them."

The sunken eyes were wet with tears — the thin lips trembled and she held the violets close to her cheek. Myra hesitated at the door.

"Maybe, Aunt Grace." Gay told her practically, "but they're not very nourishing. This is all arranged especially for you and you are to eat every bit of what is put before you—or both Myra and I are going to feel insulted."

And although the invalid demurred that she wasn't very hungry after all, somehow the food disappeared and as she sipped the delicious coffee later, she confessed that she hadn't tasted anything so good in months. Gay and Myra did a little dance together in the kitchen when the meal was over. They felt amply repaid for their effort. But Aunt Grace was like that—so grateful for everything done for her—and realizing what she owed to the slim woman in the wheel chair, Gay wondered anew how she could possibly go on without her.

"But It's Good That She Went in Her Sleep"

Mrs. Overton had hinted and one of the Board members had even suggested that she return to Bethesda in the capacity of advisor and counselor. They told her that no one had ever been so good with the little children and no one since had seemed to understand the older boys and girls. They had been willing to listen to Gay—listen and obey. But since she had left, they did much as they pleased while Mrs. Overton was there and things hadn't improved very much under the new management.

December came in that year thoroughly disguised as Indian Summer. The air was mild, the sun warm, and the pessimists predicted colds, pneumonia and kindred ills. Everyone quoted the old saying that a green Christmas meant a fat graveyard. "We'll pay for this," they grumbled, refusing to enjoy the prolonging of autumn. And when a cherry tree on Belfort Street burst into a flurry of snowy blossoms, the wise-acres moaned in anguish and shook their heads. That was a terrible sign—dire things were forecast, and they proceeded to relate tales of famine, pestilence, earthquake and sudden death.

But in the Alden household, no one paid any attention to the crepe-hangers. Everything was running smoothly and the beloved invalid seemed brighter and in much less discomfort than usual. Already plans were progressing for a gala Christmas with a tree, plenty of holly and a turkey for dinner. Gay sang as she went about her household duties and Myra cleaned the house from attic to cellar declaring it would be tempting Providence to let such weather go by without taking full advantage of it.

Christmas was but a week off and still winter held coyly aloof. Gay had been sleeping on the library davenport lately. She wanted to be near Aunt Grace in case she needed anything at night. The girl was a light sleeper—alert to the least unaccustomed sound. She had gone to bed with her head and heart full of the things she planned to do, and fell asleep at once. Toward morning, however, she became restless—a feeling of alarm—of foreboding—brought her upright and she looked about the dim room in something like terror. She thought she had overcome all that, but she listened attentively. Not a sound disturbed the early morning quiet. But the feeling of dread persisted. At last she reached for robe and slippers and went quietly down the hall to Miss Alden's room. A night-light burned dimly on the table beside the bed and the invalid lay on her back as usual, the blankets drawn snugly about her body and to her chin. She looked peaceful and comfortable. Gay drew in her breath—there was something about her face — an almost unearthy beauty. She ran to the bed, touched the thin cheek, then turned and sped down the hall to the room off the kitchen where Myra Welles slept.

"O-oh, Myra!" she called. "Come, wake up. Aunt—Aunt Grace—is——I'll Call—Doc——"

Myra was out of bed and into her clothes before Gay had gotten Doctor Borden. She passed the girl in the hall and was in Miss Alden's room when Gay entered.

"I knew it, Gay," Myra said, her voice choked with tears. "This sudden improvement—it was like the weather—not real. But it's good that she went in her sleep. No pain—no suffering. It's good this way."

Truman Submits Record 'Peacetime' Budget of $85 Billion to Congress

THE BUDGET— "A heavy burden . . . the price of peace". With these words President Truman attempted to describe his proposed budget of $85,444,000,000 for the fiscal year which begins July 1. This amount does not include a five to six billion dollar atomic energy expansion program which the President said would be sent to congress in the near future.

This proposed budget is an increase of almost $15,000,000,000 over the current fiscal year which ends June 30. And it is not far from the record World War II spending of $100 billion in the 1945 fiscal year.

As outlined by the President, more than three-fourths of the total would go for national security programs, including $51,100,000,000 for the armed forces, $10,800,000,000 for foreign aid, $1,700,000,000 for atomic weapons, $811,000,000 for defense production and economic stabilization, and $339,000,000 for civil defense.

The military expansion program, as outlined by the President, would include increasing the armed forces from 3,600,000 to 3,700,000 men, the Air Forces from 90 wings to 143, increase the Army's 19 divisions to 21, add another 16 major combatant vessels to the Navy's 392, build up to 16 large carrier air groups, and increase the Marine Corps from two to three divisions.

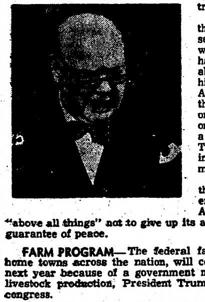
All of this, of course, is the proposed plan, depending upon approval of congress. At this point that approval is unlikely, because it would mean another increase in taxation.

Adoption of this budget would mean a deficit of $14,446,000,000 for the next fiscal year unless congress approved the $5,000,000,000 tax increase already requested by the President. But this is an election year and congress will be even more economically minded than in the past.

Congressional debate over this proposed budget during the next few weeks is likely to be bitter. And it will end with congress slashing it as much as possible. At the present moment there is no indication of how much they will cut it. The defense items may be cut some, but the greatest slashes will be foreign aid and less necessary domestic items.

MISSION ACCOMPLISHED— Aging but still dynamic Winston Churchill accomplished his mission to the United States. That mission can be best summed up in his own words as he concluded his speech before a joint session of congress.

He said: "Bismarck once said that the supreme fact of the 19th century was that Britain and the United States spoke the same language. Let us make sure that the supreme fact of the 20th century is that they tread the same path."



It was the third time in a decade that Churchill had addressed a joint session of congress. His speech was well received and it was evident he had accomplished much in bringing about greater cooperation between his country and the United States. Announcements of policy agreements, the transfer of vital materials from one nation to the other, and accord on military matters in Europe after a series of meetings with President Truman and other high officials, also indicated the successfulness of his mission.

The British leader also promised that Britain would help defend Western Europe against Soviet aggression. And he cautioned the United States "above all things" not to give up its atomic weapons without an iron-clad guarantee of peace.

FARM PROGRAM—The federal farm programs, of vital interest to home towns across the nation, will cost approximately 7 per cent more next year because of a government need to encourage greater crop and livestock production, President Truman said in his budget message to congress.

According to best estimates the greatest part of the cost would be for price supports, soil-conservation payments, and wheat-export subsidies.

The President reported the price-support program is being used to encourage farm production by keeping support prices of cotton, corn, wheat, soybeans, milk, wool, and several other commodities at 90 per cent of parity.

The budget calls for $256,500,000 for payments to farmers who carry out approved soil and water conservation practices, $70,000,000 for subsidies to farmers who co-operate with the government's sugar-control program, $182,000,000 for wheat export subsidies, and $75,000,000 for rural telephone and electrification loans.

EGYPT— The killing of an American nun in the Suez canal zone brought the conflict between Great Britain and Egypt for control of that vital waterway into sharp focus for most of this country. She was identified as Brigitte Ann Timbers, 52, of New York. She had served in Egypt since 1947.

The British charge Sister Anthony was slain by Egyptian terrorists. Cairo newspapers, however, said she was killed by British bullets. She was slain during a four hour battle between British soldiers and terrorists.

KOREA— Another week dragged by and still no important progress was reported in the Korea peace talks. The United Nations command did offer to reconsider an important phase of its armistice prisoner-exchange demands if the Communists would say how many civilians they intend to return to South Korea. In effect, the U.N. dropped its demand for an equal one-for-one exchange of Red prisoners.

There was no progress on the airfield question that has been holding up negotiations. The Reds insist on rehabilitation of airfields during an armistice. The U.N. command has opposed it.

Meanwhile, at home, Senator Taft called the Korean War unnecessary and useless and said it could have been prevented if the United States had stayed in Korea and rearmed the South Koreans after World War II.

He also said he would make a truce in Korea if he were President because "even a stalemate truce is better than a stalemate war."

Gov. Earl Warren of California, a "native son" candidate for the GOP presidential nomination, may be the key to the coming national convention. Should he throw his influence to either Taft or Eisenhower it could be decisive for that candidate. If the two top men should become deadlocked, he could be the compromise candidate. He is shown here talking to Guy Gabrielson, GOP National Committee chairman. Mayor Elmer Robinson of San Francisco stands behind them.

U.S. BABY BOOM

Population Increases 2.5 Millions Yearly

According to a statistical bulletin issued by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, the United States may soon break all world's records in population growth. Americans are being born at the rate of 26,000,000 and more each 10 years. It is estimated that by 1962 there will be 181,500,000 of us.

Births in the United States set an all-time record of more than 3,900,000 last year. After subtracting the deaths, the gain amounts to 2,650,000. This reflects, the report said, the increase in marriages after the start of the Korean War.

There is a general trend to break away from the one-or-two-child family that prevailed before World War II, the report adds. Also, there is a general trend in the United States toward earlier marriages.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Experienced Hand Wanted

Cappy Miller's back from visiting relatives and tells about a big snow storm that knocked out the electric power for miles around.

Naturally, the local power company was doing everything possible to restore service but folks kept calling in and one woman gave them a new twist.

"I don't mind not having lights," she grumbled, "but I've got 20 cows in my barn and they all have to be milked by machine. Nobody around here knows how to milk a cow by hand any more."

From where I sit, it's only too easy to forget how to do something—even as simple as milking a cow—if we don't keep at it. And that goes for practicing tolerance, too. Like forgetting our neighbor has a right to decide for himself whether or not to enjoy a temperate glass of beer. If we don't keep the other fellow's point of view in mind we're all liable to get "snowed under" by intolerance.

We're going to plant MORE FLAX

"We're going to plant about 250 acres of Flax this year . . . about all the land we can get ready," says George Mann, Windom, Minnesota. "Weed sprays, improved varieties, and modern machinery have brought us yields up to 27.6 bushels per acre and made Flax our main crop."

All over the Northwest, farmers are planning to put in more Flax this spring. And it's no wonder.

- ★ Modern varieties and methods make Flax as dependable a crop as can be grown.
- ★ Long-time government figures show Flax brings more money per acre than other crops.
- ★ New Flax support price guarantees over $4 per bushel, delivered Minneapolis. Actual market price will likely be much higher.
- ★ Government has asked for increase in flax production.

"Flax has always been such a dependable yielder that with today's price outlook, I figure it's our best choice for 1952," says Bill Wiedrick, Ward, So. Dakota. "That's why I'm going to put in over half a section of Flax this spring . . . even more than we usually grow."

Higher yields per acre will also help attain government's new Flax goal. For new 1952 Flax Book, telling how to increase yields, write to:

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: Gay Gaynor, orphan and nursemaid for "Aunt Grace" Alden, attracts the admiration of Adrian D'Archer, fiance of Vivian Poole, Bessemer's most glamorous female, snobbish daughter of the richest man in town. Vivian sneers at Gay, as a "product" of the Bethesda orphanage. Vivian flaunts her deception of her ex-fiance, Thad Borden, before the whole town. Gay is fond of Thad's father, Dr. Borden, but despises the son, who humiliated her years before. Gay is respected and loved in the Alden home, and suffers sincere grief when "Aunt Grace" passes away peaceably in her sleep. Gay begins to think of her future.

CHAPTER VI

There was the sound of a car in the gravel drive—the closing of a door—a step in the hall and Doctor Borden came into the room. He went to the bed and looked down at the quiet face of his friend. His lips moved and Gay felt he was praying. He turned and laid a hand on her arm.

"There lies one of the best friends you and I ever had, my dear. A splendid woman—one of the finest. I—shall miss her—how I shall miss her!" Then after a moment he said huskily, "I loved her."

Gay was weeping and he patted her shoulder. Myra sobbed aloud, hands covering her face. Then, with a smothered groan, she turned and hurried to the kitchen. Soon the odor of coffee reached them.

The rest of that day and the days that immediately followed were like a dream to the girl whose whole life seemed to end with the passing of Grace Alden. Friends and neighbors called. Letters and telegrams poured in — one came from Thad Borden.

"Sorry, Gay," it read. "I, too, loved her."

Gay Experiences Worry About Her Future

Gay filed it with the others. It meant nothing to her. Flowers arrived in such quantities they were at a loss to find places for them. George Alden and his wife reached Bessemer from Seattle on the day of the funeral which was delayed pending their coming. Bill Graves came up from New York. Gay, tall and pale, her shining hair seeming only to enhance her pallor, received them all with quiet dignity, refusing to notice the coolness and slights of the few; failing even to yield to the warmth and sympathy shown by those who loved her. George Alden, bluff and hearty, was genuinely affected by Gay's grief and his wife, slim and somewhat quiet, took the girl to her heart at once.

"We both know what you were to Grace," Anna said warmly. "George has often spoke of you and wished it were possible to show his appreciation. Our own children are away at school and we miss them. Grace was fortunate in having you with her. I believe she was aware of it. God bless you, my dear, and I'm certain He will."

Bill Graves accompanied Gay at the funeral. He had grown into a most attractive young man appearing much more than his twenty years. He liked his job in the lithograph company and his studies.

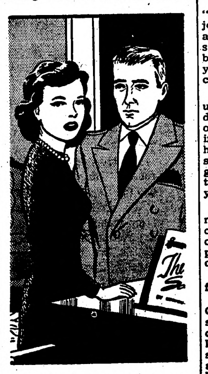
Gay wondered what she could do. George Alden and his wife insisted she do nothing at present—make no plans. They intended staying on for a few days or until Grace's affairs should be straightened out. So Gay and Myra stayed on, but the place on Belfort Street was no longer the same. The light had gone out.

It was two days after the funeral that the will was read. Aunt Grace had left to her "beloved foster daughter, Frances (Gay) Gaynor, the house at Number Seventeen Belfort Street together with its entire contents to do with as she deemed fit." She left also the sum of five thousand dollars, tax free, to "compensate in some small measure for the care and sacrifice said Frances Gaynor had given so unstintingly during their life together." She left her dear friend and devoted helper, Myra Welles, the sum of two thousand dollars "with the hope she would remain with Frances as long as she was needed." And to the surprised William (Bill) Graves, who had been prevented from returning to New York, went another two thousand "to help him realize his life's ambition and to prove to him that someone cared." The residue of the estate, which was considerable, with the exception of a few bequests to her church and certain loved charities, was left entirely to her only living relative, her brother, George, who was made executor. Gay was overwhelmed at her foster mother's generosity. Myra wept and Bill was stunned.

"I can't understand why she did it, Gay," he protested. "I can see why she remembered you and even Myra, but me — I never did anything for her except fill her with a lot of hot air about my plans from time to time. I don't deserve it, Gay. I didn't earn it."

"Aunt Grace liked you, Bill," Gay told him. "She enjoyed your visits — the evenings you used to spend with us. Remember? She used to laugh at our nonsense." She sighed, silent for a long moment. "There was never anyone quite like her, Bill. I don't know what I'm going to do without her."

The house on Belfort Street seemed very lonely after George and Anna Alden left. Bill Graves went before they did and as she watched him down the street, Gay thought again of the change in him. She wondered where his mother might be. If she could see him now, she would be proud of her son. But Bill seemed to have no desire to get in touch with his mother—or to discover if she were dead or alive. It was the memory of his brother he clung to. He had heard nothing from him in years and had come to the conclusion that he was dead. He told Gay that some day he intended starting a search.



"There was never anyone quite like her, Bill. I don't know what I'm going to do without her."

"I want him to know, if he is still alive, that I don't intend being a burden to him—that I can take care of myself. When I left Bethesda I wrote to the last address I had, telling him that I was getting a job and intended joining him as soon as I saved enough money. He didn't answer — I've heard nothing since—the letter didn't come back either." His face hardened; his voice was bitter. "He needn't have been afraid I'd sponge on him, Gay. That's what bothers me — Chuck never wanted responsibility—he always declared he meant to be free —always. But—I wish I knew——"

"You'll know someday, Bill," the girl assured him. "Wait until you're a famous illustrator. Chuck will discover you then. But you don't need him now, Bill. Aunt Grace saw to that."

Men Have No Place In Her Plans

"You mean the money, don't you? That stays right where it is —I don't intend touching a penny of it—unless, of course, an emergency arises that I don't anticipate. It means more to me to know that she cared and that she gave you a real home, Gay. And how about this Larry Boothe who's been hanging around? Like him, do you?"

"Larry's all right," Gay replied indifferently. "He has been kind—his aunt, too. She's the librarian, you know. But you must remember her, Bill. I like her a lot."

"Sure I remember her. She used to help me find books I wanted I used to talk a blue streak and she would listen as if she really was interested. But I never happened to see this Larry until now. What does he do to earn his keep, Gay?"

"Works in the paper mill—office, of course," Gay told him.

"Why of course?" Bill asked. "Too squeamish to soil his hands?"

Gay smiled. "Nonsense, Bill. I guess it's that he's an accountant —trained to use his head. They're quite necessary, you know."

"He looked like a stuffed shirt to me, Gay," the young man said "I'd hate to see you throw yourself away on anyone like that."

The smile left Gay's face. Her eyes darkened and the lovely mouth drooped for a moment.

Bill shook his head. "I hoped you'd given up that crazy idea, Gay," he said. "Now that you have a home of your own and Myra and enough money to live on for a while, why not enjoy life? Travel. See the country—the world. Come down to New York and let me show you the town. You're young, Gay. You heard what Mrs. Alden said. There's no hurry to start right in working—training. Take some time out to live."

"That will do, Bill," Gay interrupted stiffly. "You can't understand It was never any sacrifice. I loved Aunt Grace. She loved me. We wanted nothing better from life than to be together."

"I know, I know," Bill said hastily. "But just the same it was unnatural. You should have been out with other young people——"

"Oh, forget it!" the girl cried impatiently. "I have not a single regret—not a single, solitary one. I have not the least desire to become a social butterfly even if I could. I intend making something of my life—doing something worth while with it. You don't have to worry about me, Bill," she went on. "I am quite capable of looking out for myself."

"I know it," the boy replied. "It's only—well, I suppose I'm jealous of any man who hangs around you. Somehow you always seemed younger than me—even back in the old days I always felt years older—as if I had to take care of you. Remember?"

Gay's face softened. She smiled up at the tall young man so very different from the mischievous orphan who used to keep Bethesda in a state of mutiny more than half the time. "I remember, Bill," she said softly. "I shall never forget. That's why I'm going back to try to help. Yes, Mr. Alden? Did you want something?"

"I thought you were going to call me Uncle George, Gay," the man chided. "If Grace was your aunt I certainly should be your uncle. Simple, isn't it? Am I butting in here or have you a minute to spare me?"

"Of course," Gay told him, and followed him into the library.

"You asked me to go through Grace's papers, Gay," he said, seating himself before the desk. "I came across this envelope. Do you know anything about it? Did my sister ever mention it to you? It's addressed to Doctor Borden, 'To be given him after my death—otherwise to be destroyed unopened.' Somehow it doesn't sound like Grace.

Mystery Letter Causes Conjecture

Gay looked at the long manila envelope with its three red seals and shook her head. "No, Mr.—Uncle George. I have never seen it before and she never mentioned the existence of such an envelope. Shall I call Doctor Borden and have him stop in for it?" After a moment she said impulsively, "Did you know he was in love with her, Uncle George?"

Gay called the doctor's office and was told he had left on his rounds but that he had spoken of stopping at the Alden house on his way back. Was it very urgent? If it was, his housekeeper would try to reach him. It was nearly noon when Doctor Borden rang the bell and Gay hurried to admit him.

"Will you come into the library, Doctor?" the girl asked. "Mr. Alden has something for you. Before you leave I want to see you. You haven't been in for coffee lately, Doctor Borden, and Myra's feelings are deeply hurt."

The doctor patted her shoulder and went on to the library where Mr. Alden awaited him, the heavy manila envelope in his hands. The fire crackled in the grate and the doctor held his hands to the blaze.

"This feels good," he said. "Mind if I sit down for a while? This room holds many precious memories, George. When are you leaving?"

"In the morning," Mr. Alden replied. "In looking over my sister's papers this morning, Doctor I came across this envelope. It is addressed to you—to be given you after her death." He handed it to the astonished doctor who took it somewhat doubtfully, read the superscription, his brows puckering in a frown of curiosity.

"But I was here every day, George," he said, one finger under the flap of the envelope. She could have said—told me any plans she had in her mind." He paused before opening the letter, withdrew his finger and said, quietly, "If you don't mind, I will open this in private, George—unless you think it might be something you should know?"

"That's just it—that's what I wondered, Doc," the man said. "It doesn't sound like Grace. But, of course, do as you think best. It is yours. I have a notion it was prepared some time ago. I'm sure Gay knew nothing about it."

"If you will leave me for a while, perhaps I can let you know the contents——"

"Of course. I was about to suggest that, and why not stay on here for lunch with us? We have seen mighty little of you and I know how fond Grace was of you." The door closed after him and Doctor Borden broke the seals of the long manila envelope.

Splitting Hairs

Tests conducted on hundreds of heads reveal that the diameter of human hair varies from .001 to .004 of an inch. While hair can be classified as fine, medium or coarse, no head contains all fibers of one kind. The diameters will vary from very fine to coarse on every head, although generally one type predominates.

To Match Stones

An inviting modern living room with its entire fireplace wall of stone has the woodwork, ceiling and remaining walls painted a soft moss green tone which echoes a green cast to be found in some of the stones. Rough-textured draperies repeat the sandstone color also seen in the fireplace wall.

Nickel Catalysts

There has been a large increase in the tonnage of nickel used in the form of catalysts for the hydrogenation of edible and industrial oils and fats, and for the synthesis of many pharmaceuticals and chemicals of great importance to human welfare.

Cooperative Coating

When industrial finish engineers were assigned the task of developing coatings for washing machines that would not be affected by soaps, washing powders or hot water, they came up with quick-drying and baked finishes which speed production and cut costs.

Summer Kingdom

In August, when Belgrade is hot, the scenic town of Bled in the Julian Alps of northwest Yugoslavia becomes that country's unofficial capital. Marshal Tito then occupies the former king's lakeside villa.

Leaky Pipes

If the water pipe in your summer bungalow leaks just the least bit, wind some adhesive tape around the leak and brush over this with fresh shellac. Serious leaks, of course, require a plumber.

Nutritious Combination

Spinach can be combined with radishes, celery, green peppers, tomatoes, carrots, endive, and cabbage, and covered with French dressing, to make a nutritious summertime salad.

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

● Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT's action is so wonderfully different!

Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self — full of life! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price — still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

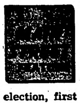
Heritage Foundation Sponsors 'Get Out the Vote' Promotion

Within the next few weeks, and continuing until the November election, the American Heritage Foundation, in association with other national and community organizations, will launch a national "Get Out the Vote" campaign that should prove of interest to every community in the nation. And it is a campaign in which the home towns of America should participate.

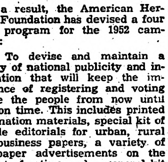
The first national "Get Out the Vote" campaign was initiated by the foundation in the off year election of 1950. The purpose was to encourage by every means available, the largest possible vote across the nation, regardless of politics and political affiliations.

It was a successful campaign. A record breaking total of 42,324,232 voters went to the polls. This was an increase of five million over the previous record (1938) for a non-Presidential election.



The score on voting in this country has not been good in recent years. For example: In 1880, 78.4 per cent of the eligible voters of the country cast their ballots, in 1900 election, the vote dropped to 73.5 per cent. In the 1920 election, first vote by women, only 49.3 per cent voted, and in the 1950 election the total was down to 44 per cent.

The inescapable conclusion, therefore, is that the right to vote—an inherent right—and the first duty of citizenship, is being waived by millions of Americans. These figures are startling, but they are true down to the home town level. And that is the reason the small communities of the nation should find the "Get Out the Vote" promotion of first importance.



THE RIGHT TO VOTE IS AN INHERENT RIGHT—THE FIRST DUTY OF CITIZENSHIP!

The causes are many and complex, but the effect is clear and unmistakable. That something should be done about it is evident — that something can be done is clear, too. Not only the results of the 1950 program can be cited, but the demand made upon the American Heritage Foundation by hundreds of organizations and communities which participated in the last campaign has been overwhelming. As early as the spring of 1951 requests were received from many of the 800 community committees who worked in the 1950 campaign for another drive to stimulate voting in the presidential year election.

As a result, the American Heritage Foundation has devised a four point program for the 1952 campaign:

(1) To devise and maintain a canopy of national publicity and information that will keep the importance of registering and voting before the people from now until election time. This includes printed information materials, special kit of sample editorials for urban, rural and business papers, a variety of newspaper advertisements on the subject of voting, and a general kit containing publicity aids and promotion plans and ideas.

(2) This is to be done in concert with others in an effort to bring the people and the candidates together for clarification and better understanding of all the issues.

Most recent "citizen action" campaigns have been marked by an accusatory tone. So, in order to avoid these negative aspects of "finger pointing" and accusations, the "Register and Vote" campaign in 1952 will attempt to take a positive slant. It will attempt to develop a reawakened sense of personal responsibility on the part of the citizen by use of television, motion pictures, radio, rallies, forums and debate which will give the individual a feeling of personal participation.

(3) A program to enlist the interest and participation of 200 national organizations and associations, and an undetermined number of community working committees behind a common program for registration and voting in 1952.

The American Heritage Foundation will serve as a source of information and as a coordinating agency. Also, it will make available to national organizations and the citizen committees kits of working tools and information material. One of these kits is an informational guide containing details of the organization and conduct of community registration and voting programs, and related activities. It would be an invaluable guide to the home town committee wishing to sponsor a "Register and Vote" campaign.

(4) A national program of awards that will give recognition to associations, communities, and working committees producing the best record of effort and result in support of the "Register and Vote" campaign.

To dramatize the importance of voting in the national elections of November, the foundation will offer a series of unique awards to communities, counties and organizations conducting outstanding nonpartisan, community - wide campaigns to bring out the vote. The foundation will not make any awards directly to individuals, but suggests that it would be a good idea for communities and organizations to bestow special honors and recognition on those citizens who contribute most to the local voting effort.

This is the general pattern that the campaign will take on a national scale. What it will accomplish on the home town level, however, will depend on the local group or committee that sponsors the program.

The American Heritage Foundation is ready to help any community group that wishes to participate. The address is: American Heritage Foundation, 25 West 45th Street, New York 36, N.Y.

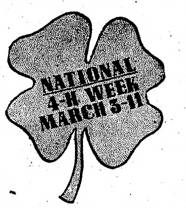
National 4-H Club Week March 3-11

The week of March 3-11 has been designated National 4-H Club Week. The annual event is the week during which 4-H members display handicraft work and publicizes its activities and accomplishments.

There are almost 2,000,000 4-H members in the United States today. In addition there are 200,000 adult club leaders and about 12,000,000 former club members.



Here is another opportunity for the home town merchant to improve his community relations and render a valuable public service. His aid and suggestions are not soon forgotten by local club members. And the importance of taking an active interest in the guidance and welfare of the youth of the community cannot be over - emphasized. Neither should the rewards to be gained under-estimated.

This interest, however, should not be limited to 4-H, but should include Girl Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Future Farmers, Boy Scouts, etc.

Other Promotions Listed for March

There are a number of other outstanding promotions for the month of March which the home towns of the nation should look for. The annual American Red Cross Fund Drive will be conducted during the month; March 2-8 has been designated as National Save Your Vision Week; Classified Brand Names Week is scheduled for March 11-17; and St. Patrick's Day is scheduled for March 17.

These and other special promotions will be discussed in future columns.

Tight Phosphate Supply Spurs Need For Early Orders

FARMERS are again facing a tight fertilizer supply situation for the coming year, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

"The record-breaking demand for foods and fibers to meet defense, civilian and foreign-aid requirements," says a statement issued by the committee, "means that more fertilizer will be needed to produce higher crop yields per acre.

"But shortages of vital raw materials used in fertilizer are already evident. This is particularly true of superphosphate, because of the serious shortage of sulfur. It is estimated that this year's demand for sulfur for defense purposes, industrial and agricultural use will exceed the supply by at least one million tons."

The committee lists these suggestions by Michigan State College soils men for helping farmers meet this situation:

(1) Have a soil test made now to find out what plant nutrients it needs.

(2) Order your fertilizer immediately.

(3) Take delivery as soon as possible before the winter rush.

"If you act promptly," says the committee, "you can probably get the grades and amounts you want. But if you delay too long, it may be too late to get plant food supplies when you need them most."

The Michigan State scientists point out that by ordering now, farmers will help fertilizer manufacturers make room for more supplies and keep their production at a high level.

Plant Food Can Help Farmers Meet Call For More Grain

THE call for bigger grain crops in 1952 emphasizes the need for farmers to order fertilizer supplies early, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in a recent statement.

"Stocks of grain are reported shrinking in proportion to the number of farm animals to be fed," says the statement.

"Livestock feeders will need more grain to provide for increasing numbers of cattle. Farmers will be asked to boost feed production."

Agronomists report that yields of corn and small grain can be increased 50 to 100 per cent above the state averages in most areas by good soil management methods including the use of fertilizer.

These agronomists recommend using 300 to 400 pounds of fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash at seeding time in the fall and then top-dressing with nitrogen the following spring. Adding a full feed of plant food is important where legume-grass seedings are to be made in the wheat.

Promptness in ordering fertilizer is particularly vital now in view of the raw materials situation. Shortages of superphosphate have already developed.

Remove All Rust

Metal surfaces should be sandpapered to remove any roughness before applying a new coating of paint or enamel. Any traces of rust should be completely removed or the rust will continue its destruction. Where the surface is sanded down to the metal itself, it should be given a first coat of metal primer before the finishing coats are applied.

Otter Crest

Cape Foulweather, now popularly known as Otter Crest, on the Oregon coast near Newport, was discovered and so named in March, 1778, 14 years before the Columbia river was discovered by Captain Gray. Today a lookout is on the cape, 500 feet above the sea, providing spectacular seascapes for many miles in both directions.

Uses Rural Electric Power to Increase Egg Production 15%-20%

"I have increased my egg production between 15 and 20 per cent using electric ventilators, night lights and an electrically controlled watering system," says Oscar Nelson, commercial raiser at Sharon, North Dakota.

Oscar is a member of the Sheyenne Valley Electric Cooperative, and uses electricity in almost every step as he prepares 7,000 chickens for market and for egg production.

Through use of electric ventilation, he has maintained an average hatchability of 87%, compared with the general average of 65-70%. Once the birds are hatched, they have a 99% chance of living under Nelson's care. He attributes a great deal of his success to the fact that he can control so many of the raising factors with electricity.

Like farmers all over the Upper Midwest, Oscar Nelson likes the way electricity saves money, saves time and saves labor. That's why he is using more electric power every year for greater production.

YOU can start planning your spring and summer production jobs now to get extra electrical help. Once you do them the electric way, you'll never go back to the old way again.

THE WOOD ISN'T SICK, but it has been chemically treated to increase its useful life in a Minnesota underground iron mine. Timber grader Eslie May takes a core sample to determine how deep the preservative has penetrated. This is one kind of conservation the iron mining companies practice. Vastly more important, they are extending the life of Minnesota's ore deposits by costly underground operations and advancements in low-grade ore processing. And these producers want to tackle something even tougher—iron-bearing taconite rock. With fair tax treatment on all grades of Minnesota ores, they can. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

Holt School News

Room 1

Last week we learned quite a bit about Lincoln, our 16th president. This week we are studying about our first president, George Washington. We hope to make book-lets or posters so we remember what we learn. Our bulletin boards tell us many things about them too.

Our new library books are ready for us now. Not one was left at school by Monday. Each of us has a library card just like big libaries so we can tell when our book is due. We hope we wont have to pay fines.

Skating is still pretty good.

MEMORIAM

In Loving Memory of Our Dear Parents Mathias and Elise Lunke who passed away June 28, 1947 and Feb 22, 1950.

To a beautiful garden our loved ones are gone,
To the land of perfect rest
Their work is done and the setting sun
Has sealed their lifelong quest.
They have left this earthly garden
For their home beyond the sea.
Though they're gone, they still live on
In the beautiful garden of memory.

Sadly missed by their children Ida, Carl, Julia and Emma.

Lazy Parents

Cowbirds, cuckoos, and a few other species lay their eggs in other birds' nests and let the foster parent hatch the eggs and rear the young. Accepting this imposition often costs the foster parents their own young, which are smaller, grow more slowly, and are eventually smothered or crowded out of the nest.

Eyesight Value

People who hold the safety of others in their keeping should be required to have good eyesight. And vigilant watch should be kept to make sure that they do. The engineer involved in a recent disastrous railroad wreck was said to have very little vision in his right eye.

Helpful Note

If oil or gum exudes from unfinished wood you wish to work with, wipe the gummy substance with a rag immersed in turpentine and then rub smooth with steel wool. Finish with one or two coats of thin white shellac. When dry the shellac will seal in the oil or gum.

Ancient Bee Keepers

On ceremonial occasions the Ancient Mayas drank "balche," made from the honey of a stingless bee that was kept in hives fashioned of long wooden tubes. Their favorite beverage was cocoa spiced with chili.

Steam Plants

Steam heating plants of large buildings now serve a double purpose—heat in the winter, coolness in the summer. An absorption machine created by scientists of Carrier Corporation converts steam into comforting anti-hot-weather atmosphere.

Maligned Whistle

The much maligned "Whistle Punk" actually has the very responsible job in the Douglas fir region forests of transmitting orders from the rigging slinger and hook tender as signals to the donkey engineer.

Blue Scats Cats

From India comes the report that tigers don't like blue. It seems that natives of outlying districts who paint their houses and barns in bright blue have been unmolested by these beasts of prey when other houses—not so painted—were not so fortunate.

Cover Nail Holes

Small nail or screw holes in a plastered wall are annoying. An easy way to fill them is to sharpen to a point a piece of ordinary chalk. Press the chalk's point into the hole and cut it off. Then sandpaper the chalk flush with the wall and coat it with fresh shellac. Match the wall's color with a little paint.

Old Mirrors

Don't throw away an old mirror just because it has a bare spot. It can be fixed for use in a summer home or child's room. Cover the spot on the back of the mirror with tin foil and apply fresh shellac over the foil and the mirror. The shellac, when dry, will secure the foil to the mirror.

Home Permanents

A recent survey [illegible] that more than 60 per cent of American women who get permanents use home permanent wave kits. More than 150,000,000 home waves have been given since they appeared on the market in 1944.

Experimental Farm

Oregon State College has conducted an experimental "Post Farm" since 1928, during which time continuous studies have been made of the Western timber species and a wide variety of preservative treatments.

Wide-Asleep

Is it possible for human beings to sleep with their eyes open? Yes, in some cases. Experiments with large groups of subjects have proved that it can be done. But, comparatively few people can do it unless they are extremely tired.

Progress Reported in Peace Talks; Republican Accepts Clean-Up Job

PEACE TALKS— After weeks of stalemate and pessimism, an unexpected feeling of optimism surrounded the Korean peace talks. There were reports of a possible early settlement. However, the hard core of disagreement on fundamental issues which have delayed an armistice have been shoved aside only temporarily and must be settled eventually.

On three issues the Communists and Allies have reached agreement: (1) Red Cross teams from Allied countries will work jointly with national Red Cross representatives from Red China and Red Korea in handling the prisoner exchange; (2) The Communists clarified their stand on paroles. The oath would require only that prisoners restrain from participation in the Korean War, instead of all "acts of war"; and (3) The Communists agreed to return U.N. military prisoners— about 11,500 men—within 30 days after an armistice.

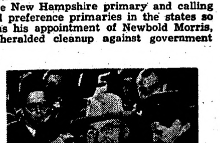
There was one development on the world scene, however, that could hurt future peace talks. Jacob A. Malik, Soviet representative in the United Nations general assembly, in a final attempt to frighten U.N. members into agreeing to immediate discussion of the Korean question in the assembly, charged that the Anglo-American block is not only preparing a third world war, but "this world war has in fact begun."

Why should Malik make such a statement if agreement in Korea is near? A number of observers are wondering if the Chinese have finally determined to have peace in Korea, even over the objection of their Moscow masters? And, is it an indication of the much rumored split between Russia and China?

The diplomats may speculate and express their hopes, but the people in the home towns of America remain skeptical about the whole thing. In their minds there are too many unanswered questions. They are inclined to believe there will be peace when the documents are signed, the prisoners exchanged, and their sons are returned home.

TRUMAN HEADLINES— President Truman caused two recent headlines in newspapers across the nation that raised considerable speculation in the home towns of the nation. The first was his announcement that he would not take part in the New Hampshire primary and calling the present system of presidential preference primaries in the states so much "eyewash". The second was his appointment of Newbold Morris, a Republican, to head his long-heralded cleanup against government corruption.

As for his first statement, President Truman was correct to a certain extent. As far as he is concerned personally the state primary system is "eyewash". A president can usually get the nomination before the actual balloting begins simply by announcing he will take it. This seems to be the case with President Truman. However, for the party out of power, state primaries may accurately define the trend of thinking in the home towns and bring added strength to the winning candidate.



PRESIDENT TRUMAN

The President's statement was further highlighted by the fact that a few days later he completely reversed himself and ordered his name not be taken from the primary ballot. In a letter to the New Hampshire secretary of state, Truman explained he had been urged by the Democratic party to leave his name on the ballot. The letter was also something of an apology to New Hampshire voters who party officials felt might be offended by Truman's "eyewash" statement.

As for the second headlines, home towners who have become skeptical about any cleanup of Washington corruption, were asking themselves just what is the true significance of the appointment of Morris, a highly respected lawyer and a self-styled Abraham Lincoln Republican, to the job that has been refused several times.

Generally, the reaction was mixed, depending on which side of the political fence the observer was on. Republicans, voicing suspicion, said they hoped it was not a plant on the part of the administration to use Morris as a window dressing while sabotaging his efforts to clean house. Democrats praised the appointment, saying his selection should be reassuring to the people.

BEHIND THE IRON CURTAIN— The State department has issued a report of conditions behind the Iron Curtain that will be of interest to every home towner who has wondered just how the "little people" in Soviet controlled territory feel. The information was accumulated from interviews with refugees and has been set out in six points:

(1) Most of the refugees disliked Stalin and other Soviet leaders and most of them denounced the Communist chiefs "in terms of unmeasured abuse".

(2) They appeared to believe that war between Russia and the United States "is almost inevitable" and could be prevented only if the men in the Kremlin feel it would be suicidal for them.

(3) The sorest nationality problem in the Soviet is anti-Semitism.

(4) The ultimate goal of world domination held by the Kremlin is considered to be unchanged. But the means by which the Red command moves toward that goal is highly flexible and involves "secrecy, deception and terror as basic ingredients."

(5) The standard of living in the Soviet Union is so low as to arouse discontent and is responsible for much crime and other social problems.

(6) Although dissatisfaction with the present regime exists, a serious problem would exist in Russia if the Communist regime were to collapse or be overthrown. It would be necessary for the Russian people to undergo a process of re-education.

BRITAIN— Great Britain, beset by economic woes and the breaking down of relations with many former subjects in far corners of the Empire, has entered a period of mourning for King George VI who died February 6.

Only a few days before his death, King George made his first public appearance after a long and serious illness, to wave bon voyage to the plane that was to carry Princess Elizabeth and her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, on their commonwealth tour.

King George VI was one of Great Britain's most beloved monarchs. And it was during his reign that the British Empire struggled through its greatest crisis—World War II and the years of economic strain that followed. Elizabeth now becomes Queen and the Duke of Edinburgh her Prince Consort. Their son, Prince Charles, is heir apparent.

Egyptian rioters are shown after they surrendered to British troops in the Suez canal zone. During the past few weeks all has been calm in Egypt as the new Premier conducts talks with the British in an attempt to settle the Suez and Anglo-Egyptian Sudan problems.

THE PUBLIC DEBT

Each Individual's Share Is $1,829

As congress battles over a new budget, the public's debt nears an all-time record with federal, state and local governments together owing a total of 282.3 billion dollars. Of this sum, 255.2 billion was federal, 6.4 billion state, 20.7 billion local.

Since 1946, when the public debt was 285.3 billion, state and local debt has climbed 70 per cent, it was estimated.

Figuring the public debt across the nation on a per capita basis, every man, woman and child is in the red $1,829, due to the combined indebtedness of federal, state and local governments. Each American "owes" $1,653 because of Uncle Sam's debts, $41 for state indebtedness and $134 due to the borrowing of local governments.

An old Negro was watching his boys trying to break a mule. As fast as the youngsters climbed aboard, the critter tossed them off. Finally he could stand it no longer. "Bring dat mule here, Rastus! You-all don't know nuthin' 'bout ridin' a mule! LemME show you!"

The old man hopped astraddle with confidence. As Lizy began to buck, he talked to her: "Lizy, you ain't fooling' with the boys now—you's got de ole man on yo' back, so you might as well quiet down."

Just then Lizy managed to toss the old man about six feet out onto the ground. He picked himself up, turned to the boys and said: "Now, boys, dat's de way to do—when you-all see she's gwine to fling ye, jump off?"

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: Generous Grace Alden bequeathes her nursemaid, orphaned Gay Gaynor, $5,000 and her house, enabling the girl to enter nurse's training. Gay, befriended by Dr. Borden, hopes to join the staff of the Bessemer Memorial hospital. Gay pities Dr. Borden because of his son, Thad, is so enthralled by Vivian Poole, madcap, pleasure-loving, snobbish daughter of the richest man in town. Vivian is now engaged to Adrian D'Archer, a New York artist. Gay despises Thad, because of the indignity she suffered one time when he kissed her against her will. He is contrite over the episode, but she refuses to associate with him or even be polite to him.

CHAPTER VII

Half an hour later, Gay knocked on the door. There was no response and she turned the handle and looked in. Doctor Borden sat in a chair before the fire, his head in his hands, the contents of the mysterious envelope on the floor at his feet. Gay went to him, kneeling beside his chair. The man stared at her for a long moment before he whispered, "All these years, Gay. What a waste. We could have been together—I could have made her more comfortable and I should have been less lonely. Why will women insist upon playing Providence——" He stooped to gather up the papers and restored them to the envelope. "She knew she would eventually become an invalid and refused to marry me. Two years after Marcia went I found I loved her devotedly. I wanted her to marry me. She refused, although I thought at the time that she loved me Now I know she did, even before I married Marcia. But she went to a specialist in New York who told her her case was hopeless. It might not have been. Love and care can work miracles, Gay."

Poole-D'Archer Wedding Is Village Gossip

The man gazed at her for a long moment, "How is it possible for a child like you to understand? My mother might have said that, Gay."

"Somehow I don't feel particularly young just now, Doctor Borden," the girl said. "After all, I'm twenty-one—nearly twenty-two. Perhaps it was the lack of love through all the years of my childhood—until I came to Aunt Grace—that makes me realize how wonderful love can be. And somehow I can still feel her love surrounding me." Her voice thickened with tears and the doctor pressed her hand.

"You're very much like her, my dear," he said huskily.

"And that is the very nicest thing anyone could tell me," Gay answered. "I hope that some day I shall become as splendid a woman."

Everything was strange to Frances Gaynor after Miss Alden died. Some of the neighbors endeavored to show their sympathy in countless small ways and the girl was grateful, but she didn't strain that kindness in the least. She was pleasant as always but she had a goal in sight and meant to reach it without the distraction of detours. She and Myra lived quietly, taking little interest in the social affairs of the town. Callers came and went and one day Jennie Bailey, a school friend of Miss Alden, dropped in while a mild February blizzard was in progress and it was during her visit that Gay heard the details of Vivian Poole's wedding.

Mrs. Bailey held out her cup for more tea and said, "I don't know whether or not you heard about our town belle's wedding, so I've brought along a copy of the New York paper containing an account of it. I'll leave it for you—unless you already have one."

Gay shook her head, her eyes puzzled. "The town belle?"

"Vivian Poole, of course," Jennie Bailey laughed. "That's a joke some of us old girls have. Vivian is such a belle, you know."

"Then she is married?"

"Indeed she is—or should be, with a bishop and two clergymen assisting at the affair, a prima donna warbling 'The Voice That Breathed O'er Eden' and other appropriate, or otherwise, nuptial hymns and the Episcopal Church filled to overflowing with the elite of the countryside—excepting Bessemer. Somehow we in Bessemer were overlooked in the excitement. The funny thing is—the Pooles are Methodists. Probably D'Archer's an Episcopalian. I wouldn't know. Anyway, it was a very swank affair. White satin, orange blossoms, real pearls and what have you. This D'Archer's quite a man from what I hear and I'm wondering how long it will last. Vivian's a spoiled brat—her parents are largely responsible—but I have a notion a lot of it was just inborn—you know, just plain original sin. I was surprised to learn that Doctor Borden wasn't invited."

Gay smiled politely. "Do have more tea, Mrs. Bailey. And these little cakes are Myra's specialty."

Mrs. Bailey laughed and helped herself to more cake. "Honestly, Gay, I wish I could entice Myra away from you. You're a lucky girl."

Again Gay smiled politely, and the visitor patted her hand.

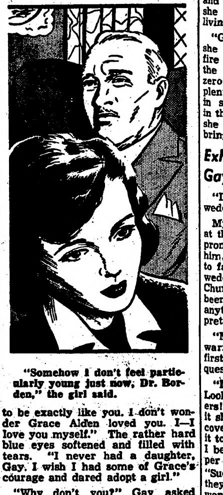
"I miss Grace, too, my dear," she said softly. "She was a rare friend—a sweet woman. I think you are a little like her."

"Thank you," the girl said simply.

"What are your plans?" the visitor asked after a moment in which she wondered if she should leave, but decided against it. The girl needed rousing. She was too apathetic. It wasn't natural.

"I want to go into training, Mrs. Bailey. I want to become a nurse—to take care of children and eventually return to Bethesda as a resident nurse."

Mrs. Bailey put her teacup on the table in front of Gay and said with affectionate admiration, "Frances Gaynor, I think you're wonderful—simply and amazingly wonderful! If I had a daughater I should want her to be exactly like you. I don't wonder Grace Alden loved you. I—I love you myself." The rather hard blue eyes softened and filled with tears. "I never had a daughter, Gay. I wish I had some of Grace's courage and dared adopt a girl."



"Somehow I don't feel particularly young just now, Dr. Borden," the girl said.

"Why don't you?" Gay asked reasonably.

"I'm afraid," the woman replied. "I doubt if I should be as lucky as she was—there are no more Frances Gaynors at Bethesda."

"No Frances Gaynors, Mrs. Bailey," Gay said, "but any number of boys and girls longing for a home and love—praying that some day their dreams of belonging to someone will be realized. Not all the children in Bethesda and similar orphanages are attractive or lovable, but many are, and as Aunt Grace was fond of saying—'Investing in human happiness pays such rich dividends.' Why don't you come over to Bethesda with me some afternoon and get acquainted with the matron and the children? I go over occasionally—it was my home for a long time, you know."

Everything Appears Strange and Unreal

"Oh, I should like to, my dear. Not that I expect to find your counterpart there, but I might find someone a little like you. Will you call me when you plan your next visit, Gay? I have always been a little fearful of going to such places—silly, perhaps, but they give me the creeps."

Gay smiled again, and rose with her caller. "I still experience a certain feeling of terror when I hear that front gate clang, Mrs. Bailey. Even yet—after all this time—I shiver when I hear it. So I guess I'm silly, too. All right, Mrs. Bailey, we'll go some afternoon next week — unless something happens to prevent."

The visitor went out into the storm, turning up the collar of her fur coat and bending her head as she faced the wind. Myra came around from the back with the snow shovel. Gay opened the door and protested her cleaning the walks.

"Shut the door, Gay!" Myra urged from the lowest step. "Don't go depriving me of the most fun I get out of the winter. I love shoveling snow. Maybe I'll even build me a snowman. You shut that door before you freeze."

The dishes done, she returned to the living room. The fire in the grate was burning low. She put on another log and drew a chair a little nearer to the blaze. So Vivian Poole was married. She picked up the New York paper and turned to the rotogravure section. The wedding had been scheduled for last fall, but something had happened. There were rumors of a quarrel—of a broken engagement—of a possible patching up of her affair with Thad Borden, then suddenly everything was straightened out. The Pooles disappeared from the Bessemer scene and no one heard anything until the local paper announced, with many pictures, that the only daughter of "our distinguished citizen," Samuel Poole, was to be united in the holy bonds of matrimony to one Adrian D'Archer, fashionable and successful portrait painter, widely known in both Europe and America as the portrayer in oils of the world's most beautiful women.

There they were, Vivian in her wedding gown—leaving the church with D'Archer—standing to receive the guests—cutting the many-tiered wedding cake—throwing her bouquet while a group of laughing girls stood with upraised hands below—leaving on her honeymoon wearing what the reporter called a "fabulous mink coat" and orchids. Gay read the account with mixed feelings.

Myra opened the back door, stamping the snow from her feet, and blowing on her cold hands as she came through the hall to the living room where Gay still sat.

"Getting colder by the minute," she announced, approaching the fire and spreading her hands to the blaze. "I bet it goes down to zero tonight. Good thing we've got plenty of coal—wood, too. I brought in some extra logs, Gay. They're in the back porch. What's this?" as she spied the paper. "Mis' Bailey bring it?"

Exhaustion Overtakes Gay, She Collapses

"It's an account of Vivian Poole's wedding to that painter."

Myra took the paper and stared at the pictures. "Flatters her," she pronounced succinctly — "prob'ly him, too. Looks too decent a feller to fall for that one. How come the wedding was to the Episcopal Church? They're Methodists—have been for—well—ever since I knew anything about 'em, which is a pretty long time."

"Methodist Episcopal, Myra. I'll warrant Mrs. Poole would be the first to point out that fact, if any question should arise."

"I know. Not tony enough for 'em. Look at that cake, Gay! Five layers! Well, I bet 'twas no better than it should be. A slather of icing can cover an unholy mess. Look, Gay, it took both of 'em to cut it! Tough, I bet a dollar." She threw the paper down with a grunt of disgust. "Such a lot of landscaping—what they call camouflaging, just so folks won't recognize that underneath they're just common, ordinary garden variety dirt. Wonder what that artist feller'll do when he finds out."

"Finds out, Myra? What do you mean? What is there to find out?"

"The Pooles ain't no aristocrats, Gay, and you know it, and so does Doc. Sam Poole made his money in crooked contracting jobs 'way back before Bessemer changed political bosses. Not many folks remember it, but I do and Doc does. He ain't got too much use for any of 'em and I guess he was mighty glad when Thad got wise to himself and gave the girl the gate."

"Oh, no, Myra," Gay protested mildly. "Vivian broke the engagement."

"That's what she says, but I bet a dollar 'twas 'tother way round. Thad's a gentleman, though, and prob'ly let her get away with it to save her face. Sara Poole wouldn't be so bad if she'd wear specs like a civilized person instead of staring half blind at folks through them things she calls her aides. I ain't got no use for such silly folks. When I need specs I wear 'em."

Gay laughed. "I don't care for the Pooles either," she said and stared at the flames for a long moment. She felt queer. Suddenly an unaccountable lethargy held her—she didn't want to move—to lift her head. Her eyelids drooped and she slumped in her chair. Myra went on talking. The sound came from a great distance. Gay tried to rouse herself, but it was too much effort. A soft gray oblivion wiped out everything and she knew nothing more.

The banging of a loose shutter on the house of the neighbor next door was the first sound Gay heard. She moved her head restlessly but refused to open her eyes. She was very tired. She wished someone would fix that shutter—permanently. She had complained once before about it. Aunt Grace wouldn't say anything but Gay had seen her wince every time the shutter banged. Where was Myra? Why didn't she make them fix it? But Myra had a sharp tongue and would probably say something to offend the Barneses. They were sort of careless—letting things slide until someone complained. She supposed she would have to attend to it herself before it made Aunt Grace nervous. She stirred—attempted to sit up and found she couldn't. Her head was too heavy—she had no strength in her arms. She opened her eyes in terror. What was the matter with her? She must have made a sound for Myra appeared from nowhere

Sinus Trouble Aided Star to Radio Fame

Sinus trouble is not usually a stepping stone to success, but it was in the case of radio's fabulous "Lonesome Gal."

Jean King had been a smash hit over Dayton's WING for two years as the purveyor of a frankly sentimental style designed to appeal to lonesome listeners. She acquired a large listening audience with a honey-voiced approach that goes something like this:

"Hi, baby. This is your Lonesome Gal who loves you better than anyone else in the whole world . . . Gee, I missed you over the weekend . . ."

But after two years in the east, Jean's sinuses were taking a beating from the weather and she packed up and headed for Hollywood. Although stations there were skeptical about her possibilities, she "packaged" her shows by tape recording for subscribing sponsors and then put it on KHJ, Los Angeles. It was then heard on four stations and grossed $185 a week. Today, it has more than 50 outlets in major cities in the U.S. and Canada and stands to gross a cool $150,000 to $200,000 in 1951!

It's Wonderful the Way Chewing-Gum Laxative Acts Chiefly to REMOVE WASTE —NOT GOOD FOOD

• Here's the secret millions of folks have discovered about FEEN-A-MINT, the modern chewing-gum laxative. Yes, here is why FEEN-A-MINT'S action is so wonderfully different!

Doctors say that many other laxatives start their "flushing" action too soon . . . right in the stomach where food is being digested. Large doses of such laxatives upset digestion, flush away nourishing food you need for health and energy. You feel weak, worn out.

But gentle FEEN-A-MINT, taken as recommended, works chiefly in the lower bowel where it removes mostly waste, not good food! You avoid that typical weak, tired, run-down feeling. Use FEEN-A-MINT and feel your "peppy," energetic self—full of life! Get FEEN-A-MINT! No increase in price — still 25¢, 50¢ or only 10¢.

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

Jiggs Gets Four "Hot-Foots"

Cappy Miller's bought himself a new car. We won't be seeing his old jalopy bouncing over the back roads any more. I'm going to miss it, too.

Many a morning Cappy and I drove off in that rattletrap for a day's hunting or fishing. We'd pile rods or guns in back, and prop open the trunk compartment—so Jiggs, Cappy's pointer, could jump in and go along.

They say when Cappy brought the new car home he opened up the hood to show off the engine—and poor old Jiggs hopped right in! Figured it was the trunk. He hopped right out in a hurry, too. That cylinder head was mighty hot.

From where I sit, old habits are hard to shake, once they get a hold. Like, for instance, too many people are still in the habit of trying to run their neighbors' lives—telling them how to act, what to wear, whether or not to enjoy a refreshing glass of beer. I say that kind of thinking's outmoded . . . ought to be turned in for a new model!

THOSE AREN'T STYLISH sleeves Mrs. Norma Legried is sewing, but they'll contain some tasty eating. They're salami casings, which will be stuffed with good Minnesota meat at this Austin packing plant. Trainloads of the meat, flour and other Minnesota-produced foods are sold in Minnesota, too. For example, on the iron ranges, miners' families are big customers of this and most Minnesota industries. The ore industry and the families of its employees can be even larger customers if the normal development of all grades of Minnesota ores is assured. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

Room 1

Dale, Lorna, Orvis, Conley. N. and Leonard earned 100 in Spelling test. Wouldn't it be nice to have 11 more names on that list? Let's try this week.

All the first graders are reading in "hard" books. Hard books are these with hard covers. They feel so glad to be finished with soft books.

In second grade numbers we are practicing writing addition and subtraction in straight and neat columns. We learn to read them correctly too.

We found 3 more new library books. "Little Owl Indian", "T-Bone, the Baby Sitter" and "Betsy's Little Star."

One little boy's problem, "Where is the school board?"

Room 2

The 3rd and 4th graders have made attractive dairy books. For a special English assignment, they write in these every day. Freehand drawings are also made

In spelling, the third graders are in the lead. This week will decide who are the best skiers for the six weeks.

In our geography test, Beulah Wikstrom, Joyce Hagen and Dale Johnson scored highest.

Today we had six-weeks test in Arithmetic.

Room 3

Typographical error of last week - the 2 and 5 were transposed. Corrected item is as follows-

Mung Bean
China's mung bean, source of the tender sprouts that make chop suey and other oriental dishes exotic, achieved commercial importance as an American crop during World War II. Grown almost exclusively in Oklahoma, it reached a production peak of 24,200,000 pounds in 1945. Demand has lessened since the war, with the result that the 1949 harvest was one-third that of 1945.

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: Orphan Gay Gaynor, exhausted by tireless nursing of her benefactor, Grace Alden, collapses with pneumonia after "Aunt Grace" dies, and postpones making application for nurse's training in Bessemer Memorial hospital. She depends upon Dr. Borden, her friend, to overcome the board's prejudice against having an orphan on the hospital staff. She scorns the doctor's son, Thad, because he once kissed her against her will and she believes him the "pet" of Vivian Poole, Bessemer's glamorous rich girl. Vivian marries Adrian D'Archer, New York artist and becomes more high-hat than ever. Gay's health begins to mend.

CHAPTER VIII

"So you decided to wake up, did you?" she asked. Her face and voice wabbled and Gay shut her eyes again. "O-oh, darling!" Myra cried softly. "Are you better? We've been so worried! Please open your eyes again—please, for Myra!" She was crying softly.

The puzzled gray eyes opened. "Wh-what — hap-happened?" she asked faintly.

Myra blew her nose in relief and dabbed at her wet eyes. "You went out like a light — right before my eyes. I thought I was taking such good care of you and look what happened."

"Have—I—been — sick, Myra?" Gay asked haltingly.

"I'll tell the world you been sick —nerve exhaustion and - pleuro pneumonia, that's all. Now you ain't to talk no more—just rest and get well." She patted the blanket, tucking it more closely about the patient, and whispered, "There's a trained nurse upstairs—sleeping her head off. But don't you fret yourself. Myra's here."

Doctor Prescribes Rest and Quiet

Gay's eyes closed and Myra slipped from the room. In a few minutes she returned to stand just inside the door. Gay smiled. Myra came closer. "I'll tell you about the nurse—Miss Dantry. I wouldn't have but one—she's all right I s'pose, but I wanted to take care of you myself. 'Twas Doc insisted on a trained nurse. Umph! She can't stand what I can—I'll be glad when you bounce her. Too bossy. Young chit! Thinks she knows all there is to know. Well, I could tell her a few things——Why, you're smiling, Gay!" she cried in delight. "You're better. I'm going to call Doc and see what you can have for breakfast. And I'm going to get it myself, nurse or no nurse, and I hope Miss Know-it-all won't come barging in while I'm gone." She said the last more to herself than to Gay and left.

The girl stared around. Why, she was in Aunt Grace's room—off the library. Then where——She closed her eyes and a flood of memory threatened to bring oblivion again but this time she fought against it. Sunlight filtered through the interstices of the Venetian blinds, and the sound of someone beating a rug together with the occasional banging of the loose shutter—homely, everyday sounds—helped. The shutter banged again and she heard Myra at the telephone.

"If you can't get nobody to fix that blind, Mis' Barnes, I'll do it myself. Miss Gaynor's sick and's got to have quiet I'd like to know how a person can have quiet around here with all that racket going on. Okay—okay—no need to get huffy. I'm just looking out for my patient. I'll warrant you'd do the same if 'twas t'other way 'round. G'bye" The sound of wheels on the gravel drive sent Myra to the door and Gay heard her greet Doctor Borden jubilantly.

"She's come to, Doc! She's woke up!" Myra told him. "What can I feed her? And I want you should tell that Barnes woman next door to get that shutter fixed, pronto. It's been banging again. It nearly drove Miss Grace nuts and I don't intend it should do the same to Gay."

They approached the bedroom and Gay heard the doctor ask, "Is —— Where's the nurse — Miss Dantry?"

"Oh," Myra told him scornfully. "She's sleeping. Fine nurse she is —can't stand nothing, seems like. Got to have her rest—she says."

"She was on duty more than her eight hours, Myra," the doctor pointed out. "That's all she's supposed to work at a stretch. It's a State law, you know."

"Fiddlesticks! Who cares for law when there's sickness? Well, she's still sleeping and I, for one, am willing to let her sleep till doomsday. Why don't you give her the bounce, Doc? I can take care of Gay—good, too."

"We'll see," the doctor said noncommittally, as he opened the door. "Well, my dear, you gave us quite a scare." He greeted the girl in the bed. "Feeling better this fine morning, I see." His fingers were on her wrist and he watched her carefully as she frowned over the thermometer under her tongue. "Great!" he exclaimed as he shook down the mercury. "All you need now is rest and plenty of it—good food and cheerful surroundings. Oh, good morning, Dantry! Our patient is feeling much better. Pulse a little slow but quite even—not bad at all. Temperature quite normal."

For a time Gay's convalescence seemed slow, but with the coming of spring she began to improve. Miss Dantry stayed on for two weeks longer and by the time she was ready to leave, she and Myra had become fast friends. Myra taught her how to make her own particular brand of wheat cakes; how to make bread as she had been taught in her girlhood.

Gay watched the two with amusement. Eve Dantry was clever. Her training had taught her the art of getting along with people and Gay marveled at the rapidity with which Myra's hostility vanished before the nurse's persistent and untiring friendliness. Gay and she had long talks regarding training-schools. Miss Dantry had trained in Boston and urged Gay to apply for admission in her school.

"But I don't want to be responsible, Mrs. Bailey," Gay protested. "And I have been away from Bethesda for nearly seven years."

"Not that you'll be going anywhere for some time, my dear," she told her. "It's going to take you all summer to regain your strength. I don't see how you ever let yourself get in such a state, Gay. How come?"

New Environment Sought By Gay

"Oh, I suppose I was more run down physically than I realized," she replied. "The years of nursing Aunt Grace—her death and the subsequent loneliness—then, I suppose I was just in the condition to give some wandering germ a fine welcome. I don't recall catching cold, but I must have. I sort of remember hearing Myra order me to shut the front door when I was watching her shovel snow from the walks. That's one of the last things I do remember, and perhaps that really had nothing to do with it. I guess it all goes back to Aunt Grace's death. The weather changed abruptly about that time—winter arrived with a vengeance and the winds were terrific. Why, Eve, I have never before been really ill—not in my whole life. If I could only shake off this terrible lethargy I'm sure I should be all right."

"That will right itself," the nurse told her. "Doctor Borden was talking about your going away somewhere when the weather settles somewhat. Florida, perhaps, or Warm Springs or even a farm some place. Did he say anything to you about it?"

Gay shook her head. She was propped up in bed, pillows behind her so that she could look out at the wakening world. It was still March and probably they would have more snow, but spring had arrived, chronologically, although there was little evidence of its advent to be seen. Still, there was a warmth in the sunshine and one or two robins had appeared and only this morning Gay had seen a flash of blue as one of spring's harbingers flew past her window. Even as she watched she had felt her spirits lift.

"I don't know, Eve," she said. "I haven't had much experience in traveling. I don't think I should like living in a hotel——"

"I have an aunt in Williamsburg —not far from Washington, Gay," the nurse said. "Have you ever been to Washington? No? Then you'd love it. I wonder if you would like me to write Aunt Bess and see if she would take you—and Myra, of course. I don't suppose you'd go without her, and I don't blame you. She's a perfect dragon, but priceless just the same. How about it, Gay?"

"But I can't seem to see the necessity for going away, Eve," Gay protested. "I have everything I need right here and Doctor Borden to look after me if I should get ill. No, I think I'd prefer to stay at home."

"That's where you're wrong," the nurse said. "You need a change —of air, scene and environment. I'm going to talk to the doctor and if he's in favor of it, I'll write to Aunt Bess. She's a grand woman—you'll like her—she knows everyone and all about them, so you'd find life interesting all right. A couple of months with her and I'll wager you'll come back a new woman."

"We don't want no new woman, Eve," Myra said, hearing the end to the conversation. "We want the old Gay back. The old Gay suited us all right. And don't you go putting a lot of silly ideas into her head, this here's her home. I can feed her better'n she'd get fed any place else, and I'll bet a dollar you won't find no better folks anywheres than live right here on Belfort Street in Bessemer. Why, this town's called the garden spot of the State and to my mind Seventeen Belfort Street's the heart of it. Of course she can go if she's a mind to—maybe she'd like to get away from me for a while——" The tone showed hurt and Gay hastened to put her at ease.

"Don't talk nonsense, Myra," she said. "If I go away, you've got to come with me. I won't go one step without you."

Mrs. Bailey Adopts A Bethesda Orphan

Myra's face brightened. "Then I got a proposition. Why not go down to Doc's cousin's cottage on Crescent Lake? He spoke to me about it and wondered if you'd be interested. It ain't far from Bessemer—'bout twenty miles—and the house is high and dry with lots of pine and balsam trees and they're awful healthy to be near, you know —does something to the lungs. He said we could have the camp to ourselves during May and June."

In another week Gay was sitting up for a part of each day and on the day the nurse left she received her first visitor. Mrs. Bailey stopped in with an armful of pussy willows and a jar of the first crocuses to push through their blanket of leaves. Gay was thrilled. Jennie Bailey sat down and listened while Myra told her all about Gay's illness, how she had "passed out" right before her eyes while she was still "talking her fool head off," and how she and the nurse—with the help of Doctor Borden—had pulled her back "from the very gates of Heaven."

"She'll never get no closer till she gets right inside, Mis' Bailey," Myra said dramatically. "That girl was sick and I ain't lying. It makes me so mad at myself to think I believed she was all right—that I was taking just the best kind of care of her—feeding her everything she fancied and seeing she went to bed early and slept late and didn't lift her hand to do a thing—and that reminds me, Frances Gaynor. You washed and dried them dishes the day you took sick, didn't you?" She pointed an accusing finger at the girl who only stared at her in perplexity.

"Did I?" she asked. "I don't remember."

"The sickness was on you right then," Myra accused her. "And there I was enjoying myself shoveling snow. I could kick myself around the block, Mis' Bailey, when I think of it."

The door closed on Myra and Mrs. Bailey said warmly, "Myra is priceless, Gay. You're a lucky, lucky girl. We didn't make that visit to Bethesda, did we?" she went on. "But just as soon as you are able, we'll go. I'm quite anxious to acquire my daughter. My husband is perfectly willing, but he insists that you give the child your okay. He says you know kids and I think you do."

"But I don't want to be responsible, Mrs. Bailey," Gay protested. "And I have been away from Bethesda for nearly seven years. There's an entirely new population there now. But I shall be glad to help you. Are you sure it's a girl you want?"

"A girl, Gay. I want a girl and she must have at least some of your attributes. I should like her to be under ten—preferably five or six. I'm not particular about looks—although naturally I shouldn't want any daughter of mine to be ugly. What I mean is she need not be beautiful—the golden-haired, blue-eyed fairy of the movies. If she's fairly good—adaptable and willing to learn—I shall be quite satisfied. I believe environment has a great deal to do toward developing beauty in a child—physical and spiritual. Don't you?"

"Of course," Gay agreed. "I have seen quite ordinary children fairly blossom into something pretty wonderful after adoption. It's amazing what love and care will do for a child."

Myra came in with tea and Gay and the visitor continued their discussion for the remainder of her stay. But it was several weeks before they made that visit to Bethesda. In fact, they made three before Mrs. Bailey decided on the child she wanted, and then the orphan was far different from the one she had envisioned.

NON-FERROUS SCRAP IS NEEDED TOO!

Shellac Sticks

The remarkable affinty of shellac to wood has puzzled many. The solution may be in the fact that shellac is the resinous secretion of the "Lac" bug which feeds on certain trees in India and Burma. Thus there is a natural tie between shellac and wood. Science never has been able to duplicate shellac synthetically.

Carte Du Jour

Caligula, or Little Boots, who succeeded Tiberius as ruler of the Roman Empire in 37 A.D., "drank pearls of immense value dissolved in vinegar." The prodigal emperor was as wildly extravagant with his guests, serving them "loaves and other victuals modeled in gold."

Two-Wheelers

At the height of its popularity in the late '90s, there were an estimated 5-6 million bicycles on the roads in the United States. Today, the latest survey reports more than 20 million modern bicycles in use here, and an estimated total of 70,000,000 throughout the world.

Scented Sails

It has been said that the sails of Cleopatra's barge were so highly perfumed that long before it could be seen, people knew she was approaching from the fragrant air which greeted their noses.

England Imports Coal

Great Britain, whose coal export business was never below 34 million tons for more than a decade preceding World War II, now must rely upon the United States to make up the difference in her own supply.

Learning to Ride

The late George Bernard Shaw, a great rider of bicycles almost up to the time of his death said, of learning to ride:

"The change from hopeless failure to complete success is instantaneous and miraculous."

Time Saver

Time-conscious women have formed the home permanent wave habit. Besides being able to have a permanent at any convenient time, they can attend to many small household tasks while curls are processing.

Trailer Town

The largest concentration of trailer coach dwellers in the world is shaping up at the new atomic energy plant at Aiken, S.C. About 1700 parking lots have already been provided for defense workers now on the job. Plans call for a total of 10,000 lots for these mobile homes by mid-1952.

Infant Tastes

The newborn infant has a much more highly developed sense of taste than of sight or hearing. Every day-old child already has preferences as to what tastes he likes or dislikes. Sweet tastes are relished, but salt, sour or bitter tastes are rejected with a definte cry of distaste.

Strong Stuff

Raymond E. Reed, director of the Toni Research Laboratories, states that hair is the strongest of the animal fibers. It has a tensile breaking strength of approximately 6,500 pounds per square inch. The breaking point of cast iron is 15,000 pounds per square inch.

Cooking

Cooking in Ancient China was "a fine art." A banquet was not complete without the 'five flavors,' the sweet and sour, the salty and spicy, and the bitter. A dinner began with fruit and sweets, and ended with soup and rice."

Optic Topics

Poor eyesight frequently appears to be a contributing factor to criminal tendencies. Courts in Toledo, Ohio, have found that 40 per cent of the juvenile delinquents with whom they had to deal had visual troubles.

Shampoo Hint

Rinse hair thoroughly with clear, warm water before applying a detergent shampoo. You'll find the preparation easier to spread through wet hair, and the resulting lather will be more abundant.

Many Uses

While most people know shellac as a fine and protective finish for floors and various household surfaces, it has a multitude of uses in industry. It is used on everything from lead pencils to battleships.

Department of Commerce Reports Personal Incomes at $251 Billion

ELIZABETH II—At first glance it would not seem important to the average American home towner that a young woman has assumed the duties of Queen of Great Britain and the British Commonwealth of Nations. But it is important and may have a great bearing on the future of many people in the cross-road towns of this country. It is around this young woman—Elizabeth II—the British people will rally in their last-chance fight against bankruptcy and breakup.

In the last 15 years the empire has been breaking up like a ship drifting in stormy seas. As recently as 1936 the empire was able to pay its way in international commerce. Today, however, Britain is the debtor of the world. And a complete break-down of British economy would be felt in the cross-roads of America.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II

Britain's present situation is almost entirely due to World War II. To win that struggle she sacrificed most of the money she had saved at the peak of her power when she directly ruled 450 million people. She spent many of her overseas investments to pay for guns and food.

In addition, the war altered the balance of power in the world, making the United States and Russia the dominent powers. Here again Britain becomes important to the United States because she is an ally by history, treaty and language.

So, the new Queen becomes a symbol of unity in the empire and an important figure in the balance of power between the United States and Russia. She is the figure around which the British people will rally. Whether she succeeds or fails is of vital importance to this country economically and politically.

CONTROLS—The fight is on. It began when President Truman requested an unenthusiastic congress to strengthen anti-inflation controls and extend the Defense Production Act for another two years—until the middle of 1954.

Again the President slashed out at the Capehart, Herlong, and Butler-Hope amendments which he unsuccessfully attempted to have appealed last session. He also swung a haymaker at congress generally by declaring "most people" already are having trouble paying present prices and congress should devote itself not to legislative formulas for raising prices, but instead to finding ways of moving prices downward.

The President's strong language caused many of the legislators to believe the chief executive was making 1952 campaign material. Controls and inflation are touchy subjects they know from experience. They also know they must take some kind of action that will impress the people in the home towns, but how they will get around the pressure groups, if they do, is another question.

PERSONAL INCOME—The Department of Commerce reports total personal incomes of Americans in 1951 was 251 billion dollars, 12 per cent above 1950. The department said that by the end of 1951 total individual incomes had advanced to an annual rate of 257 billion, compared with 238 billion at the end of 1950.

Except for a steady increase in farm income and in government salaries, other phases of the economy reported on showed incomes had become stabilized over the past six months.

The department reported the biggest increase was in government payrolls. They jumped by 33 per cent to an annual total of 29 billion. Farm incomes increased almost 25 per cent to a total of 17 billion. Higher farm prices accounted for most of the increase, the report said, but there was also slightly increased production.

In private industry, payrolls increased from 123½ billion in 1950 to 140 billion. Increased employment and higher wage rates were credited with the increase.

VETERAN TRAINING—Since enactment of the original GI bill, 7½ million veterans in the United States have taken advantage of its educational and vocational training provision, a house committee studying new legislation for Korean veterans reports. The bill's educational provisions—by far the most widely used and most expensive benefit—have cost the taxpayers $12,347,162,546 as of July, 1951.

Subsistence payments to veterans in school amounted to $8,645,203,670. Educational institutions received $3,276,046,930 in payment for tuition. Other payments for books and supplies (including tools for veterans in trade schools) came to $425,911,946.

Although not begrudging the money to veterans, the committee reported "graft and waste plagued the program" and an excessive number of VA employees took bribes, gifts, unusual loans, gratuities, services and ownership in schools.

Under the new bill just introduced in congress payments of all educational benefits will be made in a lump sum directly to the veteran. Single men would get $110 a month. Married veterans would receive $150.

FOREIGN AID—Fearing congress may severely cut foreign aid funds, the United States has warned European leaders to agree quickly on plans for a European defense force, including German troops, if they want to increase their possibility of getting economic assistance.

Secretary of State Acheson and other administration leaders feel that congress may become stubborn over foreign aid funds if they can not show real progress in European unity and the incorporating of German troops in the defense plan.

The greatest difficulty appears to get French Foreign Minister Schuman and West German Chancellor Adenauer to stop their bitter feud which threatens the whole defense project. There are two main points for their disagreement: (1) France is afraid of a resurgence of aggressive German nationalism once the Germans begin to rearm; (2) West Germany wants assurance that if its troops are to participate in the defense set-up it will have a voice in N.A.T.O. decisions.

The growing movement to draft General Eisenhower for the GOP presidential nominee, got a big shot in the arm with a Madison Square Garden rally. The Texas delegation is shown on its arrival in Penn station in New York. It was estimated over 15,000 people attended the whooping-it-up rally.

FARM REVOLUTION

Big Drop in Farm Labor Is Forecast

Increasing use of chemicals on American farms is expected to displace about 3½ million farm workers by 1970, a senate labor-management relations subcommittee said in a recent report.

Conducted by Dr. Francis J. Weiss for the subcommittee, the study reported "we are at the threshold of a new era that promises plentiful food and fiber, but is also fraught with the dangers of economic and social disruption against which we have to prepare our nation no less than against the dangers of armed aggression."

Weiss' report says chemical and mechanical labor-saving devices will reduce farm workers from the 1950 level of 9,320,000 to 7,785,000—a 17 per cent drop—by 1960 and another 2 million by 1970.

Economical Cough Relief! Try This Home Mixture

No Cooking. Makes Big Saving.

To get quick and satisfying relief from coughs due to colds, mix this recipe in your kitchen.

First, make a syrup with 2 cups granulated sugar and one cup of water. No cooking needed. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Then get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist. This is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, well-known for its quick action on throat and bronchial irritations.

Put Pinex into a pint bottle, and fill up with your syrup. Thus you make a full pint of splendid medicine—about four times as much for your money. It never spoils, and tastes fine.

And for quick, blessed relief, it is surprising. You can feel it take hold in a way that means business. It loosens phlegm, soothes irritated membranes, eases soreness. Makes breathing easy, and lets you get restful sleep. Just try it, and if not pleased, your money will be refunded.

Blue Whale

The blue whale, largest species of the giant sea mammals, measures about 25 feet in length at birth, usually exceeds 70 feet within two years, and may be almost 100 feet long when full grown.

Exceeded Expectations

"If the Nation's Capital continues to grow during the remainder of the present century as rapidly as it grew between 1910 and 1914; it will have a population of more than 800,000 at the beginning of the next century," wrote President William Howard Taft in the National Geographic magazine of March, 1915. Current census bureau estimates show populations of 870,000 for the District of Columbia proper and 1,402,000 for the Washington metropolitan district.

You Can DEPEND on FLAX

"FLAX is my most dependable crop," says H. O. Storm, Route 5, Sleepy Eye, Minnesota. "We've had poor crop years for three seasons in a row, but Flax has yielded well every time . . . better than anything else. Neither oats nor soybeans come close to Flax as a cash crop."

"My most dependable crop."

That's what H. O. Storm says . . . and it's what thousands of other Minnesota and Iowa Flax growers are saying.

It isn't just a case of these folks being loyal to their favorite crop, either. Flax is dependable. A careful government survey showed that over a 15 year period, good years and bad, Flax yields varied less from season to season than yields of wheat or other small grains.

Today, with new, hardy, disease-resistant, high-yielding varieties . . . with early planting . . . with modern weed control . . . Flax is an even safer and more profitable crop than ever.

Use of Red

Red is a color to be used judiciously. On too large areas it is overpowering, irritating. Used as an accent color, it lends life and gaiety to less interesting surfaces. Many women like to use it as an accent color in kitchens, but such a warm color should not be used in too large quantities in a room that is so frequently overheated by meal preparation.

Poor Risks

Chicks suffering from parasitic diseases and nutritional disorders are poor risks for vaccination. For this reason, the condition of the flock should be investigated before vaccination is attempted. The advice applies to all four poultry diseases against which vaccines have been developed: fowl pox, laryngotracheitis, Newcastle disease, and infectious bronchitis.

Keep Disease Out

To avoid any chance of disease being introduced to your poultry flock from the outside, don't let any poultry crates except your own come into the poultry house.

Greek National Costume

Forty yards of material are used in the skirt of the Greek national costume—the ballerina-like kilt worn by the Army's elite corps, the Evzones. Ten yards more go into the Evzone's flowing sleeves. Embroidered vest, tasseled garters, tasseled cap, and pompons on his boots complete the fancy-dress uniform.

Douglas Fir

Lumber cut from the same tree or log of Douglas fir consists of several classes of grades suitable for a variety of purposes. The inner part of the log will usually be tight-knotted although coarse-grained, while finer-grained material is found toward the outer edges. In larger, older logs the tight-knotted center area may be surrounded with a layer of lumber with black or loose knots which eventually give way to a layer of clear wood.

Repeat Stingers

Wasps, hornets and yellowjackets can sting repeatedly. Only the bee leaves its sting in the wound.

FARMER BUILDS OWN SNOW PLOW!

Here's a homemade solution to the snow removal problem—and a good one. It's the invention of John Hove, farmer near Harvey, N. Dak. Hove started with a model T chassis, added two grain augers and the straw blower from an old separator, and presto—a rotary snow plow, which Hove uses to clear his farmyard and the road to the highway. Hove admits the machine is slow and needs some improvements, but, says he, "It sure saves me a lot of back-breaking work—just like the electricity I've got on the farm." (Photo—Harvey Herald)

Meet the Brightbill Twins of Jamestown, N. Dak.

Susan and Jay, a pair of happy-go-lucky five year olds, are two of the four children of the J. T. Brightbills, Jamestown, N. Dak. For busy Mrs. Brightbill, an all-electric home is a "must". Washing clothes, ironing, or quick, clean baking in her electric oven, she saves precious hours with all-electric living—finds the savings in dollars important, too. (Photo by King Studio, Jamestown).

The "Brains" of the Otter Tail System

At the Hoot Lake Plant (Fergus Falls) this twenty by eight foot master control board is the "brain" of Otter Tail's 8,000 miles of transmission line and 44 electric generating plants. Technicians like Chief Dispatcher Charlie Sachs and Dispatcher Phil Van Buren (shown here) maintain a 24-hour vigil throughout the system by checking this board—which shows every town, every plant, every substation transformer, and every "pole top" switch in the Otter Tail network.

Your electric company — a development of free enterprise through private initiative — is your best source of low-cost electricity.

Plant Nutrients Boost Grass, Legume Yields By Two Tons Per Acre

ADDING fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash has increased pasture yields as much as 2 tons per acre, declared Prof. C. J. Chapman, University of Wisconsin extension agronomist, in reporting on the results of pasture demonstrations in the state.

On the Henry Berg farm near Blanchardville, in Lafayette County, pastures fertilized with 10-10-10 showed yields of 8,025 pounds per acre on July 5, 1951, compared with 3,750 pounds on unfertilized fields, an increase of 4,275 pounds.

Fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash, boosted growth of both grass and clover on the Harold Churchill farm, in Pierce County, Wis.

When 10-10-10 fertilizer was added to white clover and bluegrass on the Betlach farm near Sun Prairie in Dane County, pasture yields increased by about 1¾ tons per acre. The output was 8,025 pounds per acre on July 2, 1951, on the fertilized fields and 2,300 pounds on the check plots.

The pasture demonstrations are being carried on in cooperation with farmers, county agents, vocational agriculture teachers and organizations in the fertilizer industry.

American Plan for European Army Endangered by Allied Bickering

EUROPEAN ARMY—The American plan for a united European army to check Communist aggression in Europe, to which America has given millions of dollars, equipment, and its greatest military brains, is on the verge of being smashed. Old and bitter national feelings have climbed out of the grave of history and asserted themselves.

The big question is how and under what conditions West German troops are to be included in the European army. The United States has proposed that West German manpower be brought into an "integrated" force under General Eisenhower. West Germany and France have their own views of how this can be accomplished and to what extent.

The German view: She will agree to participate in the "integrated" force only if taken in as a full partner in the Atlantic alliance. In addition she wants several other concessions, including maximum sovereignty under the "peace contract" yet to be signed.

The French view: France would agree to inclusion of German units, but stipulates that they can not be recruited until after the five other participating nations have ratified the treaty. These nations are France, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg, and Italy. This stipulation means a delay of months at least since ratification of a final treaty is a long process. In addition, the French want several other checks, particularly control of war production in Germany as a safeguard against the rebuilding of German military might.

The three big powers—the United States, Britain, and France—have already told the Germans they can not be included in the Atlantic alliance for the time being. There was a hint that if Germany signed the European army pact, however, and showed the Allies she could behave, then it would be a much easier job of selling western Europeans on the idea of bringing Germany into the alliance. The three powers did offer concessions, including a seat on a projected four-power appeal board that will have power to review and modify the sentences of more than 1,000 German war prisoners.

West Germany and France are still far from satisfied and remain suspicious of each other. The door is still open for a possible settlement, but the whole thing hangs by a thin thread. A few wrong words at the wrong time can still wreck the plan that has cost home towners of America millions of dollars. But more important, it could cost the west a united front against communism. It has been said that an European army can not work without West Germany and France. It is obvious, then, these two must compromise their demands for the good of the whole and world peace.

RECORD DIVIDENDS—The Department of Commerce reports corporations in the United States paid a record $8,053,000,000 in cash dividends during 1951, a 2 per cent gain over 1950.

However, many corporations reported profits down during the last half of 1951, with a drop of 16 per cent for the month of December. It was partly attributed to increased tax payments.

Dividends were reported up in all fields except manufacturing. Automobile dividends dropped 25 per cent and electrical machinery and chemical goods manufacturers reported dividends down about 10 per cent.

The oil refining industry registered one of the biggest gains with 19 per cent, mining was up 16 per cent, railroads 10 per cent, and paper and printing 8 per cent.

ATOMIC TESTS—A new series of atomic tests will be held at Eniwetok atoll in the Pacific, it was announced by the Atomic Energy Commission. It was also revealed that further tests are planned for the near future in the Nevada desert near Las Vegas.

In keeping with the secrecy that surrounds such tests, exact dates and the type of atomic weapons to be tested were not announced.

Meanwhile, the British government has announced it will test its first atomic weapon this year in Australia. The British turned down an offer from the United States for a site for the tests and it was understood that no U.S. observers would be on hand to witness the experiment.

POLITICS—As the political pot begins to boil in earnest, the biggest question in the minds of most home towners remains: will President Truman seek the Democratic nomination? There seems to be little question but that the President can have it by simply saying so. Since January when most observers were willing to say "I don't think he will run again", observations have gradually changed to "he might" and "he will".

But until Mr. Truman announces his intentions, the Democratic side of the question is wide open. There is increasing evidence that Senator Kefauver—although he is unseasoned as far as presidential timber is concerned—is gaining strength. His campaign is showing surprising strength at the grassroots level and if Mr. Truman suddenly announces he is not interested in reelection, he will have a great advantage over those "better-late-than-never" candidates who will come out into the open.

THE DRAFT—The armed forces will draft 19,000 men this month—15,000 for the Army and 4,000 for the Marine Corps. The April call brings to 894,000 the total of announced draftees since the draft was resumed in September, 1950. Also, the April call is the lowest since September, 1951, when 16,900 men were requested by the two services.

KOREA—The United Nations have agreed to the Communist proposal for a conference after an armistice is signed in Korea to discuss political issues concerning Korea. An armistice in Korea, however, is still a long way from an accomplished fact. At the moment there are three important unsettled questions. They are:

(1) The Communists want Russia included as a neutral power to help supervise the armistice. This is unacceptable to the United Nations since it has been established without any doubt that Russia has trained and supplied Communists in Korea with arms of all kind.

(2) The Communists insist upon their right to construct airfields in North Korea during an armistice. The United Nations deny this right.

(3) How, where and when the exchange of prisoners of war will take place.

When these questions are settled, the home towners of the nation can then begin to hope for an armistice.

CONSERVATION PROGRAM

Water Resources Legislation Proposed

President Truman's water resources policy commission has proposed legislation establishing a national water resources and related land conservation policy. The legislation was drawn from a recent report from the commission to the White House.

The proposed legislation would establish the policy of recognition of river basins as units of development; define broad national objectives in safeguarding of essential resources and would affirm the duty of the federal government, with state and local agencies, in cooperation with people of the several basins, to bring about maximum utilization of water and land resources. The Budget bureau also is studying the commission's proposed legislation.

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: Gay Gaynor convalesces at Crescent Lake following a collapse with pneumonia contacted by arduous nursing of her benefactor, "Aunt Grace" Alden. Gay hopes to enter nurse's training at the Bessemer hospital if her friend, Dr. Borden, can overcome the board's prejudice against girls "without good families." Gay often expresses open disgust for Dr. Borden's son, Thad, because of his enthrallment by Vivian Poole, "glamour queen" of Bessemer, and the outrage he perpetrated several years before when he kissed Gay against her will at an orphan's picnic when she caught him teasing a small boy who is an invalid.

CHAPTER IX

Ruth Bradford was a pathetic child. She was an ungainly seven with long legs and thin awkward body. She was shy, smiling but seldom. Her eyes held a perpetual look of fear and she haunted Jennie Bailey from the day she first saw her. Gay sought the answer to that look and discovered that the child had been orphaned during a fire that destroyed the tenement in which she and her mother lived. The father had died some time before and since his death the wife and child had suffered untold privation and want. She had been in Bethesda now for nearly six months and was considered something of a problem. Gay pondered the advisability of recommending the adoption. She felt extremely sorry for the child, but was she letting Mrs. Bailey in for more than she could handle? Jennie Bailey, however seemed determined to take Ruth. The child had no objections. Apparently nothing mattered very much and at the suggestion of the matron, Ruth went home with Mrs. Bailey for a visit.

It was, perhaps, a week later that Gay saw her again. She was amazed at the change in her. Her eyes were bright, she dimpled at the least provocation and frankly adored her hostess.

Gay and Myra Settle At Crescent Lake

"Jerry is pleased as Punch," Mrs. Bailey told Gay. "Ruth and he get along beautifully together—you should see them. She is really a very bright child and a lovable one, too. Do you know, Gay, I think she is even a little like you. They tell me we can't legally adopt her until six months have proved our suitability as parents. Will you vouch for us, Gay?"

"Indeed I will, Mrs. Bailey," Gay assured her, "and I'm sure Myra and Doctor Borden will, too. Myra and I are leaving tomorrow for Crescent Lake. The doctor says spring is much farther advanced over there and thinks the sooner I get away the better. I'm not terribly keen about going, but Myra and he have ganged up on me."

Crescent Lake gave Gay and Myra a pleasant welcome. The weather was fine that day. A few feathery clouds floated lazily above the blue waters of the lake, where frolicsome whitecaps chased each other and the snowy sails of numerous boats flirted with the breeze. The cottage, high on a bluff, had been prepared for their coming.

The unpacking done, she went to the tiny kitchenette and began preparations for lunch. She glanced out the window from time to time and saw that Gay hadn't moved. She appeared to be lost in the beauty of the view. It didn't take long to prepare the simple luncheon. She set the table near the wide windows overlooking the lake and went to the door.

"Lunch is ready, Gay," she shouted and the girl came at once.

"I'm hungry, Myra," she said as she sat down at the table. "I don't know when I've been so hungry before. It must be this air."

"Good!" Myra said. "Now we're getting some place. After lunch you're to take a nice long nap while I sort of look around. You're to have the west bedroom, Gay. I don't want you waking up too early in the morning. You need lots of sleep and you're going to get it. Now who in tunket can that be?" as a knock sounded on the kitchen door. She left the room to find out. Gay laid down her fork and sat back in her chair. She could hear Myra explaining that they had only just arrived and were pretty tired from the trip. "Miss Gaynor's recovering from pneumonia," she heard, "and the doctor says she's got to have lots of rest and quiet. So, if she ain't very sociable——" Gay left the table and joined Myra.

"It is kind of you to call," she said gently to the girl standing on the back porch. "Won't you come in? Do, please. And you must have a cup of Myra's famous coffee. You are Mis——?"

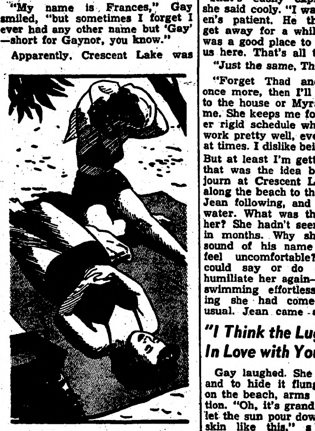
"Spencer," Myra said before the girl could speak. "Jean Spencer. She lives next door—if you can call it that. I'll set another place." She spoke almost grudgingly. This wasn't going according to her plans.

"I really shouldn't—so soon," the caller said, but she came in and took the chair Myra placed for her.

"I have always loved this place," she said. "You have the best beach along this side of the lake and when my brother is home he haunts it. The Bordens are here such a short time each summer that we have the beach practically to ourselves. Jim and Thad have always been friends—were in college together, though Jim went to law school and is now settled in Rochester. I'm crazy about Thad—have been since I was five and was I pleased when his affair with Vivian Poole went haywire. I never could stand her. He's a peach and far too splendid to be wasted on her. This air will work wonders for you, Miss Gaynor," she went on. "What's your first name? I hope you will call me Jean—everyone does."

"My name is Frances," Gay smiled, "but sometimes I forget I ever had any other name but 'Gay'—short for Gaynor, you know."

Apparently, Crescent Lake was just what the doctor ordered, for Gay showed improvement from the day she arrived. Myra was jubilant.



"You can still get blistered, my love," Jean warned. "That sun's hot at this time of day and we'd better go in."

Nineteen-year-old Jean Spencer from up the beach became a daily visitor and was the tonic Gay needed. The laughter of the two girls as they splashed about in the water or sunned themselves on the sandy beach was good to hear and Myra reported the progress to Doctor Borden by telephone.

"Why don't you come up Sunday, Doc?" she asked early in June. "I bet a nickel you won't know our girl. She's got what they call a million-dollar tan and has gained eight pounds. She laughs a lot, too, and that's something she ain't done since Miss Grace passed on. How about it, Doc? We'll have a couple of ducklings for dinner.—You will?" She laughed at the doctor's reaction to that announcement. He loved ducklings cooked as only Myra could cook them.

Thad Borden's Friend Teaches Gay To Swim

Down on the beach the girls were resting after Gay's daily swimming lesson.

"Well, do you think I'll ever make the Olympics, Jean?" Gay laughed, reaching for her dark glasses.

"You're doing surprisingly well," Jean told her. "After all you're probably still not up to par, you know. A sickness like yours takes a lot out of a person. And I'm not such a swell teacher. If you can learn from me you must be smart. I wish Jim had been here. He'd have taught you in no time at all—given you confidence. That's all you need—confidence. I've been swimming since I was five. I remember it so well. Thad Borden and Jim were having a grand time showing off before our houseguests. They were about fifteen—a fresh fifteen, too. I tagged along as I always did, no doubt making a pest of myself, when suddenly Thad tossed me into the water. He and Jim were right there so I suppose there was no actual danger, but I yelled and screamed with fright—anger, too—kicking and splashing and howling my head off. Well, first thing I knew I was swimming — making a great to-do about it, to be sure, but none the less, swimming. Thad always declared the lake went down at least a foot because of the water I swallowed. I couldn't seem to keep my mouth shut. But since then I've just about lived in a bathing suit. And by the way—yours is pretty. Bessemer?"

Gay nodded. "Beechers'. They had the prettiest ones. Some of them were very extreme, or at least they seemed extreme to me. I'm getting nicely tanned even in this one. Myra sputtered about the burns I got at first — slathered me with creams and insisted I was going at it too hard."

"Honestly, Gay, Myra's worse than my mother. I mean, she fusses more. Is she any relation to you?"

Gay shook her head. "No blood relation, but I love her just as much as if she were. She's wonderful!"

"I'll say," the other agreed. "And can she cook! Boy, oh boy!" After a moment she asked somewhat warily, "Of course you know Thad Borden, don't you?"

Gay hesitated. "No, I can't say that I know him, Jean. I know who he is, of course. Why?"

"Nothing. I just wondered. Your coming up here and all."

Gay laughed and got to her feet. "That's easily explained, Jean," she said cooly. "I was Doctor Borden's patient. He thought I should get away for a while. He felt this was a good place to come and sent us here. That's all there is to it."

"Just the same, Thad——"

"Forget Thad and let's go in once more, then I'll have to go up to the house or Myra will be after me. She keeps me following a rather rigid schedule which appears to work pretty well, even if it irks me at times. I dislike being fussed over. But at least I'm getting strong and that was the idea back of our sojourn at Crescent Lake." She ran along the beach to the spring-board, Jean following, and dived into the water. What was the matter with her? She hadn't seen Thad Borden in months. Why should the very sound of his name cause her to feel uncomfortable? Nothing he could say or do could hurt or humiliate her again—ever. She was swimming effortlessly, not realizing she had come farther than usual. Jean came alongside.

"I Think the Lug's In Love with You"

Gay laughed. She was trembling and to hide it flung herself down on the beach, arms wide in relaxation. "Oh, it's grand to lie here and let the sun pour down on your bare skin like this," she murmured drowsily.

"You can still get blistered, my love," Jean warned. "That sun's hot at this time of day and we'd better go in." She tossed Gay a towel and proceeded to rub herself vigorously. Gay got lazily to her feet.

"I have to move, but of course you're right. You're always right, I've noticed."

"Am I?" the other asked, her voice muffled in the towel.

"Yoo hoo!" came from the cottage on the bluff and the girls waved an answer.

"Lunch," Jean said, brushing back her hair. "I wonder what Myra has conjured up for you this time?"

"Come and see for yourself," Gay advised. "She always sets a place for you. Oh, come on," as the other demurred. "You can call your mother so she won't expect you right away."

"We sort of expected Jim today or tomorrow—just for the week-end. He's after information for a client of his—some big shot with a spotted past, I surmise. Or maybe it isn't actually—only appears spotted. The more complex and involved a case is the better that brother of mine likes it."

"We've been an Adamless Eden so long it will be strange to have a man about," Gay said. "Well, I'm glad I've learned to swim, Jean. You've been sweet to spend so much time with me."

"The pleasure has been mine, darling," the other girl replied. "But speaking of Adam—why hasn't that good-looking Boothe man been up here since that first Sunday? I didn't think you were especially cordial to him, Gay. Don't you like him?"

"Of course I like him—but that's quite all. And don't you go building any romance there, my dear. He told me he would be away for a month or six weeks auditing the books of one of the branch offices. He's an accountant in the Bessemer Paper Mills. His aunt is librarian at the Public Library. That's all I know about him. Did you like him?"

"Y-es, I liked him—what I saw of him. He didn't seem to be aware of my existence. I think the lug's in love with you, Gay."

Gay shook her head. "Not necessarily. I'm going into training to become a nurse, Jean—a children's nurse. Marriage is in the dim and distant future—if at all. Men are the least of my problems. Now don't look so skeptical. It's absolutely true, believe it or not."

"You'll pardon me if I say I don't believe you," Jean said. "Wait till Mr. Right happens along. I bet you'll go down like a ninepin—all your fine, high-sounding theories knocked into a cocked hat. The kids you'll nurse will be your own and I hope you have a dozen." She laughed gleefully but stopped as a clear, piercing whistle cut the air.

MODERN ISN'T the word for these dressed-up canines! Ultra-modern is the word! Just as cute and amusing as can be are the 4 and 4½ inch poodles in snappy light-blue and black permanent-dye transfers! The younger crowd will want them on sports shirts, blouses, head scarves—homemakers use them as "conversation piece" designs on cocktail napkins, guest towels, organdy hostess aprons, gifts. Just iron them on—no embroidery involved!

Cooking for Nine Faster, Easier With A Home Freezer

"Cooking for nine can be a mighty big problem," says Mrs. Arlene Fredrickson of rural Bagley, Minnesota, "But since we put in the electric home freezer, it's become much faster and easier. For instance, instead of baking one or two loaves of bread, I bake a dozen at a time, and store them in the freezer.

"I prepare hot dishes, meat loaf and other such foods the same way . . . store them all in the freezer for future use. I really like it for keeping vegetables and fruits most, though.

"I hardly do any canning . . . take all the vegetables fresh from the garden and put them in the freezer. We eat garden-fresh foods all winter. My freezer is a convenience I certainly wouldn't want to be without now."

A Beer Message

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

They Do "Give A Hoot" For Easy

Easy Roberts finally got rid of the noisy pigeons that used to whoop it up under his eaves.

He must have tried a dozen ways to scare them off. But no matter what he did, they would be right back cooing by his window the next morning.

Then Easy thought of an old stuffed owl he had in his attic. He propped it on the roof so's all the pigeons could see it. They left . . . and three hoot owls have taken their place. Easy swears the hooting is even worse than the cooing of the pigeons.

From where I sit, quite often a "bright idea" will turn out to be "not so bright" after all. That's why we should never be too cocksure of our ideas and opinions— but always try to keep an open mind. I believe a refreshing glass of beer is the best thirst-quencher — you may believe differently. But who's to say one's right and the other is wrong? Let's just practice tolerance. It'll save a lot of hootin' and hollerin'.

Start of a Miracle

A MIRACLE-DRUG, Cortisone, will be the end-product of this beef-bile being drained by Ed Mason, Austin, Minn., packinghouse worker. Cortisone, often used in the treatment of arthritis, is one example of science teaming up with industry to find important uses for once-wasted materials. On a vastly larger scale, another kind of science-industry teamwork on Minnesota's iron ranges is developing new ways of processing once-useless low-grade and taconite ores. This teamwork can assure a bright Range future, with increasing benefits for all Minnesota. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

Orchard State

Orchards and vineyards in New York state rank third in the nation, covering 280,000 acres. Among the large producing regions are the Chautauqua grape belt, vineyards and orchards.

Many serious ailments of feedlot lambs could be prevented if all shippers would give lambs proper resting periods on long trips to feedlots along with nutritious feed at each unloading point.

Cooking for Nine Faster, Easier With A Home Freezer

"Cooking for nine can be a mighty big problem," says Mrs. Arlene Fredrickson of rural Bagley, Minnesota, "But since we put in the electric home freezer, it's become much faster and easier. For instance, instead of baking one or two loaves of bread, I bake a dozen at a time, and store them in the freezer.

"I prepare hot dishes, meat loaf and other such foods the same way . . . store them all in the freezer for future use. I really like it for keeping vegetables and fruits most, though.

"I hardly do any canning . . . take all the vegetables fresh from the garden and put them in the freezer. We eat garden-fresh foods all winter. My freezer is a convenience I certainly wouldn't want to be without now."

The Fredricksons farm 3 miles south of Bagley, Minnesota, and are members of the Clearwater-Polk Electric Cooperative.

They are a rural family which has made extra good use of rural power to save work, save time and save money. The electric home freezer is just one of many, many ways they use electricity . . . both in their farm home and on farm production jobs.

Ask your home-town electric dealer to demonstrate an electric home freezer and other electrically - operated appliances. Learn how these new conveniences make farm living PERMANENTLY BETTER for you by using just a little rural electric power.

They Do "Give A Hoot" For Easy

Easy Roberts finally got rid of the noisy pigeons that used to whoop it up under his eaves.

He must have tried a dozen ways to scare them off. But no matter what he did, they would be right back cooing by his window the next morning.

Then Easy thought of an old stuffed owl he had in his attic. He propped it on the roof so's all the pigeons could see it. They left . . . and three hoot owls have taken their place. Easy swears the hooting is even worse than the cooing of the pigeons.

From where I sit, quite often a "bright idea" will turn out to be "not so bright" after all. That's why we should never be too cocksure of our ideas and opinions—but always try to keep an open mind. I believe a refreshing glass of beer is the best thirst-quencher — you may believe differently. But who's to say one's right and the other is wrong? Let's just practice tolerance. It'll save a lot of hootin' and hollerin'.

Dry Ice

Once a novelty, dry ice has become a major industrial product because of its importance in preserving frozen foods during shipment. Last year's total of more than two million pounds of frozen food processed was over four times the total a decade ago, according to Air Reduction Company, Inc., which provides the bulk of the chemical.

Homes On Wheels

One out of four trailer coaches now being built will be used by service men and their families, particularly for Reservists and National Guardsmen who want to maintain family life when called for Federal duty. Two-thirds of present "production of "mobile homes" is going for defense workers, leaving only seven per cent for non-defense markets.

Aid To Electricity

When the makers of electrical transformer boxes wanted a finish that would withstand the heat of the molten asphalt mixture that is used to anchor electrical elements in place, industrial finish technicians developed a finish that not only withstands this heat, but is also durable and good looking.

Ahoy, Coolness!

Ships in the tropical trade are painted white for appearance, but more particularly to keep interior temperature as low as possible. The black hull of a ship that was transferred to West Indies cruise service was painted white after the first trip. Readings on two identical cruises—one before repainting and the other afterward, showed a difference in coolness of 8 degrees.

Acrobats

Many a startled adult will agree that the acrobat or "stunt man" has nothing on the four-year-old when he starts climbing, jumping, and standing on his head. The Parents' Consultation Service urges parents not to discourage these important muscle co-ordinating activities on the part of the pre-school-age child because of a feeling that he may be "showing off."

Processing

In the milling process, some of the rice grains are broken. The perfect, unbroken grains are called "head rice." The partially broken grains are called "screenings" and the smaller particles are classified as "brewers rice," used by many leading breweries in making premium quality beer.

Allies in Accord on United Army; Drug May Wipe Out Tuberculosis

EUROPEAN ARMY—The members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization have reached agreement on four important points for the defense of Western Europe and the strengthening of the united army which may mean the salvation of the democratic form of government. Each of the points will involve great sacrifice on the part of every government, by soldiers, and by the taxpayers of the participating nations.

Most important, perhaps, was the agreement to provide about 50 combat-ready land divisions and 4,000 operations aircraft for European defense this year in addition to forces Greece and Turkey can make available.

Second, and possibly the most controversial, to approve the general outlines of a plan partially drafted by France, West Germany, Italy, and the Benelux nations to merge their armies into a European defense force. Under this plan the Allies of World War II propose to rearm Western Germany. The arming of West Germany, however, must be approved by the governing bodies of the countries involved in the treaty. Whether the French will ratify the proposal is still in doubt. If turned down by the French National Assembly it could mean the collapse of the unified army.

Third, the N.A.T.O. nations agreed to create a board to make a detailed study of the western world's needs for airfields, barracks, communications lines, and other army-supporting facilities, and recommend how to share the cost of building them.

And fourth, to streamline the N.A.T.O. itself and make it more efficient, on a pattern roughly like that of the United Nations secretariat, instead of the present overlapping boards and committees.

The plan for a 50-division army this year means that 20 more divisions will have to be recruited and armed in the next 10 months. One authority interpreted the plan in these words: "Right now the Reds could walk to France's westernmost Atlantic shore, but by the end of this year they would have to fight their way. By the end of 1954 we would be able to throw them back."

This picture of the big three foreign ministers and West Germany's Konrad Adenauer was made at conclusion of talks at which agreement was reached on outstanding issues for a united European army. Left to right: Dr. Konrad Adenauer of West Germany; Secretary of State Dean Acheson; Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary; and M. Robert Schumann, French foreign minister.

TAXES—The Public Affairs Institute, which describes itself as a nonpolitical organization, has issued a study of U.S. tax laws which points out six loopholes that are costing the Federal government $4,500,000,000 a year and benefits almost entirely those with annual incomes of more than $10,000.

They are outlined as: (1) Percentage depletion—$750,000,000; (2) Income splitting—$2,500,000,000; (3) Failure to include a provision for withholding of taxes on dividend and corporate-bond interest payments—$30,000,000; (4) Failure to increase estate and gift tax rate sharply and tighten up on this levy—$400,000,000; (5) Failure to increase the capital gains tax rate sharply and tighten up on this levy—$400,000,000; (6) Approval of a broadened family partnership provision in the 1951 law—$100,000,000.

More will be heard about this study in the next few weeks as congress gets into full debate over the proposed new tax bill.

RUSSIAN A-BOMBS—On the 34th anniversary of the Soviet army, Russian military leaders and newspapers warned the western world that Russia possessed "atom bombs of all calibers" and said that any aggressor would be met with "crushing, deadly blows." In addition, the same sources charged that "Anglo-American imperialists" are planning to unleash a third World War.

Most observers agreed that the speeches and articles were the usual line of Soviet propaganda that is necessary on an important occasion. But it was noted that the claim clearly implied that Russia has in her arsenal tactical atomic weapons to match those recently developed and tested in the United States.

COST OF LIVING—The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports the cost of living stood still in its latest 30 day survey as measured by the government's new consumers' new index.

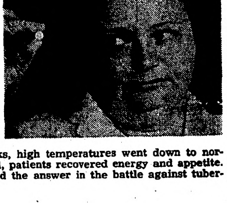
Food prices rose about a tenth of a per cent, but clothing and house furnishings were down a little.

The new index stood at 189.1 per cent of the 1935-39 average in mid-January. This was 4.2 per cent above a year earlier and 11.1 per cent above the pre-Korean average. Wholesale prices were reported 5 per cent below a year ago.

ATOMIC SPY TEAM—Julius and Ethel Rosenberg, convicted last spring of stealing atomic secrets for Russia and sentenced to die for treason, heard their sentences upheld by a Federal Appeals Court. Three appeal judges said in their decision: "It cannot be held that these sentences are unconstitutional." Only the United States Supreme Court can now save the Rosenbergs from the electric chair.

The Rosenbergs are the first Americans ever sentenced to death for treason outside a military court. At the time of their conviction, Judge Irving R. Kaufman called Rosenberg worse than a murderer. In his opinion, Judge Kaufman said, the Rosenbergs' treason led to the war in Korea, with its tens of thousands of American casualties.

TUBERCULOSIS—Dreaded Tuberculosis, once the great scourge of mankind, may within a few years be completely wiped out. This hope is centered on a new wonder drug which was used in recent months in treatment of nearly 200 persons in the advanced stages of the disease at Sea View hospital in Staten Island.



Slightly smaller than aspirin (see picture), it is expected to be on the market by summer under various trade names. The pills will cost a TB patient a fantastically low 25 to 50 cents a day.

In the tests at Sea View hospital doctors were amazed at results obtained by the drug. Within a few weeks, high temperatures went down to normal, lung cavities began to heal, patients recovered energy and appetite. Science, at last, may have found the answer in the battle against tuberculosis.

MEAT PRODUCTION

Nation's Packers Store Meat Surplus

The U.S. Department of Agriculture reports the nation's meat production continues to grow faster than the consumer can take it off the markets. Production in late February was estimated at 22 per cent higher than at the same time a year ago.

Heavy marketing of lambs, sheep and hogs is reported in many marketing centers. During one week in late February 1,464,000 hogs were slaughtered by packers, compared with only 1,044,000 during the same week a year before. There has been a sharp slaughter increase also in sheep and lambs with storage at a record high.

Beef stocks in storage were up 17,000,000 pounds in January of this year, compared with the previous month.

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: Convalescing from pneumonia at Crescent Lake, orphan Gay Gayner, meets Jean Spencer, friend of Thad Borden, whom Gay despises. Thad is the son of Dr. Borden, whom Gay is depending upon to gain her appointment on the staff of Bessemer Memorial hospital as a nurse trainee. Thad has inflicted upon Gay the "ultimate insult" of kissing her against her will. Gay aspires to specialize in nursing children and to become nurse at Bethesda orphanage, but she manifests no interest in acquiring a husband and children of her own. She feels disgust for Thad Borden's seeming infatuation with Vivian Poole, "glamour girl."

CHAPTER X

A tall young man stood on the bluff, Myra beside him. "Jim—o-oh, Jim!" Jean squealed excitedly. She ran ahead of Gay and up the stone steps to fling herself into her brother's arms. He whirled her around several times before letting her go. Gay climbed more slowly.

"This is my brother, Gay—the one I've been telling you about. Isn't he super? Jim, this is Gay—Frances Gayner who is staying at the Borden cottage. You know Myra?"

"Of course," the young man answered. "Myra's one of my best friends, aren't you, Myra?"

"Umph!" Myra sniffed. "Easy come—easy go. That ain't my idee of friendship." She turned and stalked away and into the cottage while the newcomer eyed her quizzically.

"How long can you stay?" Jean asked.

Jim Spencer Wins Gay's Friendship

"I told Mom, Sunday, but she insists I'll have to make it Monday. It seems Dad can't get here until Monday morning—some snag's delaying him. How do you like Crescent Lake, Miss — er — Gay?" he grinned.

"Wonderful!" Gay said with enthusiasm. "It has made a new person of me. Yes, Myra, We're coming. You're staying for lunch, Mr.—er—Jim?" she smiled.

"Gosh, I don't know if I dare. Myra invited me, but after that nasty crack she handed me I ——"

"Myra's bark is worse than her bite," his sister reassured him. "Only I'd advise you to make haste slowly, as Grandma used to say. Myra resents freshness in any form except food. Wait till you taste her coffee, Jim, and her hot rolls. Um'm's! Out of this world. I always stay when I'm asked."

"I bet you do," her brother jeered. "And what does Mom say to that?"

"Oh, she doesn't mind. Very often she joins us."

Jim turned to Gay. "Say, what has this Borden cottage come to, anyway, a community dining room? And is Myra always the cook?"

Gay smiled and Jean said, "Just you wait until you've eaten one of Myra's meals, Jim. Why, even Mother's sold on her—sold completely. The best way to Myra's heart is through her cooking. I know. She was inclined to resent me at first—until I made a perfect pig of myself at breakfast."

"Breakfast!" shouted Jim. "Don't tell me you even come here for breakfast—you—you scavenger!"

"How dare you!" his sister shouted in her turn. "Don't you let Myra hear you class her food as garbage, Jim Spencer, or you'll leave this place in irons. Come on or she'll be mad and we can't risk that."

Gay listened to the lively banter with a feeling on envy. How wonderful to have someone to play with—have fun with like this.

"That's not fair," Jean complained as Gay returned to the other room. "Anyway, why put on airs just because Jim's lunching with us?"

"Pipe down, infant," the young man told his sister. "Just because you're only half civilized yourself gives you no excuse for wanting everyone else to approve of your uninhibited methods. If Gay sticks around here long enough perhaps you'll learn a few tricks."

"Tricks? Gay hasn't any tricks," Jean protested. "Gay's a perfect lady—except when we're in swimming. Then she lets herself go. Then she's actually younger than I am."

"Don't pay no attention to him, Jean," Myra advised, bringing in a plate of hot rolls. "Brothers always talk turkey—they think it's smart. I don't know why, neither. Now sit down, all of you, and eat while hot things is hot and cold things is cold. Want I should call your ma, Jean? She might as well come over, too. 'Tain't much fun eating alone—and there's plenty here."

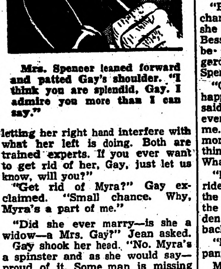
"You're a peach, Myra," Jean said. "You do that. If I call her she'll likely make us both come home. Tell her we'll wait for her like one horse waits for another—when the feedbag's on. Tell her to hurry or there won't be anything left."

"Mad at me, Myra?" Jim whispered as she passed him a platter of baked ham.

On Sunday Gay attended the chapel service with the Spencers. Myra decided she couldn't go. Perhaps the doctor might come early and she felt she should be there to receive him. Dinner was to be at three and the Spencers would dine with them. The day was fine. The chapel was well filled and the elderly clergyman preached a heart-warming sermon, short and to the point. The choir was augmented by a visiting contralto whose splendid voice sent waves of beauty echoing along the beach and far up into the surrounding hills. She was a large, middle-aged woman of commanding appearance and after the service held gracious court. Everyone loitered and the Spencer party was late in getting started home.

"Myra will wonder what has become of us—I want to help her if she will let me."

"She won't," her daughter assured her. "Myra's ambidextrous and follows the old precept of not letting her right hand interfere with what her left is doing. Both are trained experts. If you ever want to get rid of her, Gay, just let us know, will you?"



Mrs. Spencer leaned forward and patted Gay's shoulder. "I think you are splendid, Gay. I admire you more than I can say."

"Get rid of Myra?" Gay exclaimed. "Small chance. Why, Myra's a part of me."

"Did she ever marry—is she a widow—a Mrs. Gay?" Jean asked.

Gay shook her head. "No. Myra's a spinster and as she would say—proud of it. Some man is missing a wonderful helpmate."

Gay Fears Hospital Might Reject Her

Jean hooted. His mother smiled indulgently. Gay said nothing.

"I mean, of course, vicariously," the young man explained. "As a foster son—or nephew—or something of the sort. Just how does she consider you, Gay? Surely not as her mistress."

"Heavens, no!" the girl cried. "I don't know, exactly. We just sort of belong—have belonged ever since she came to Bethesda when I was a tiny girl."

"Bethesda?" Jim asked. "That's the orphanage, isn't it? Don't tell me you ever lived in Bethesda, Gay. How come? Or is it none of my business?"

"I lived in Bethesda from the time I was two, when my parents were killed, until at sixteen I went to live with Miss Alden," Gay replied quietly.

"I—I didn't know that," Jean said slowly, almost fearfully. "And Myra?"

"Myra was our cook. She came to Miss Alden's a year or so before she died. I love her and she loves me. She is a grand person."

"You're shouting!" Jim applauded. "And it's not only Myra who's grand, my girl. You're pretty swell yourself."

"Aunt Grace was wonderful to me—to us both."

"Aunt Grace?" Jean asked. "Who's she?"

"Miss Alden. She wanted me to call her that and I was happy to do it. She taught me so that I was able to graduate from high school with honors and I expect to enter the training school for nurses with the next class—I hope in late June or early July—and eventually go back to Bethesda as its resident nurse."

Mrs. Spencer leaned forward and patted Gay's shoulder. "I think you are splendid, Gay. I admire you more than I can say."

"I don't," Jean pouted. "Why should she want to bury herself in a smelly old hospital for three years? I hate sick people."

"Pipe down, sis," her brother growled. "You're only half-baked. If Gay feels she wants to do something useful with her life she's to be commended—she'll make a swell nurse—except for the risk the authorities might take in adding her to the staff. Ever consider that angle, my girl?" he asked, casting a swift sidelong glance at the girl beside him.

Gay stiffened. What did he mean? Did he feel as Doctor Borden did that the hospital might refuse her admission?

"Risk?" she repeated, coldly.

"Don't be naive, Gay," the young man chided. "You're going to be a menace to the male population—a real threat to the peace of every man in the institution, and that's no fairy tale either."

"Rubbish!" the girl answered shortly.

"Do you suppose I could enter at the same time, Gay?" Jean wanted to know.

Now it was Jim who hooted derisively. "You—a nurse! Don't make me laugh. You'd faint at the sight of blood—scream to high heaven at your first operation—refuse with sound effects to scrub patients and utensils, not to mention floors—weep copiously when death snatched a patient from your grasp and in general make a blooming nuisance of yourself. No, my pet, the nursing profession is not for you. Anyway, you're not grown up. Wait a few years—five anyway—and then I might consider it."

"You might consider it, indeed! What have you got to do with it? I bet I could be a nurse if I liked—if they accepted me for training. How do you know you'll be accepted, Gay?" she demanded.

Dr. Borden Fails To Keep Appointment

"Of course I don't," Gay replied, "but I have an idea I shall be. After all, Doctor Borden is a member of the staff and he will vouch for me—my ability, I know, and my scholastic standing is excellent—my health, ditto."

"But——" Jean began and changed her mind. Gay thought she knew what she intended saying. Bessemer Memorial was known to be extraordinarily particular regarding its nursing staff. Mrs. Spencer spoke.

"Of course they will be only too happy to have you, my dear," she said with conviction. "And if I'm ever sick, I hope you will come to me. Now please, Jim, put a little more speed into this car. Everything on the road is passing us. What ails you, anyway?"

"I just don't want to shorten this ride," Jim said unperturbed, but the last quarter mile slipped under the car and they slid down the Borden drive just as Myra came to the back porch to look for them.

"Hi!" Jean called: "Got company?"

Myra shook her head. "Where on earth you been? Don't tell me Reverend Hammond preached this long. Or did you get a puncture?"

Gay joined her. "Didn't Doctor Borden come, Myra?" she asked. "Have you heard from him?"

"Not a word. Doctors!" Myra sputtered. "Most undependable people in the world. Well, if he ain't here by three we'll eat without him. I ain't a-going to let them ducklings spoil for no doctor. Come in and rest yourselves. Getting hot, ain't it? They's lemonade and ginger ale in the refrigerator. Help yourselves—only don't spoil your dinner."

Myra held the meal until three-thirty when the telephone rang and Mrs. Potter called to explain that the doctor was tied up at the hospital. He had asked her to let them know. He would try to drive over one day during the week. Myra asked if anything special had happened and the housekeeper seemed surprised that no word of the accident on the highway had reached them. A bus and train had collided just outside Bessemer and some twenty people had been badly injured.

"Anybody killed?" Myra asked.

"Only the driver," Mrs Potter reported. It was thought he had taken suddenly ill and had lost control of the bus, but just what the cause might have been probably no one would ever know. It was an interurban bus and no one from Bessemer appeared to be among the casualties. Myra replaced the instrument and returned to the table where everyone was eager for her report.

"So eat plenty," she counseled as she finished. "No sense in letting all this go to waste. I hate trying to fix up cold leftovers, 'specially duck. Here, Jim help yourself to this piece of thigh—plenty of stuffing and some more onions. Eat hearty, folks. I hope they won't be even a smitch left to haunt me. You ain't eating nothing, Gay. Don't you feel so good?"

"I've had plenty," the girl replied. "It's all delicious—although duck isn't my favorite food. A little goes a long way with me."

"I know—I know," Myra murmured, "and the next time I get ducklings for Doc he'll be right here before I cook 'em. These doctors! Humph! Can't depend on 'em —not one minute, you can't. I hope neither of you girls will ever fall for no doctor. Drive you crazy."

Praises speed of Active Dry Yeast

Busy Mother is Top Cook at Clay County Fair

Daughters Charlotte and Donna admire the prize ribbons their mother won last fall at the Clay County Fair. Mrs. Mabel Erickson took a total of 19 prizes for her cooking contest entries—13 firsts, and 6 seconds. A record like that proves she's really an expert cook!

Mrs. Erickson enjoys cooking and likes to fix special dishes for her family at her home in Clay Center, Neb. And like so many good cooks, she has lots of praise for Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast. "I like its fast rising action," she says, "and the way it stays fresh so long."

All during Lent serve plenty of yeast-raised goodies—such a delicious way to brighten your Lenten meals! They're wholesome and nourishing, too. When you bake at home, use yeast. Use the best—Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast. It's always dependable . . . guaranteed fresher and faster rising or double your money back! Try Fleischmann's Active Dry Yeast.

Abundance of Gold

Since gold rush days of the early 1850's, Oregon has produced gold valued at more than 100 million dollars.

Swings Into Action

A BOSUN'S CHAIR makes a narrow but safe perch for this Duluth shipyard worker as he chips paint from the bow of an ore boat. The big ship, frozen fast in the ice of Lake Superior, is one of a fleet of 270 such carriers being overhauled and repaired during the winter at Great Lakes ports. And on the iron ranges other winter work is in progress—preparing for a new ore shipping season. This year-round work, usual in the ore industry today, assures steady jobs, steady income for the thousands of ore miners and their families—means benefits for all Minnesota. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

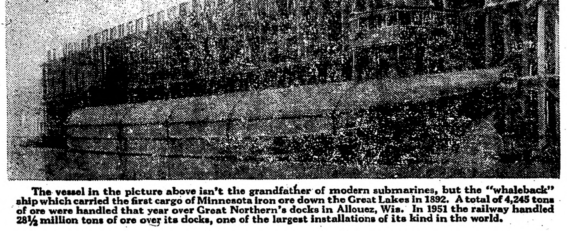
Remove All Rust

Metal surfaces should be sandpapered to remove any roughness before applying a new coating of paint or enamel. Any traces of rust should be completely removed or the rust will continue its destruction. Where the surface is sanded down to the metal itself, it should be given a first coat of metal primer before the finishing coats are applied.



The vessel in the picture above isn't the grandfather of modern submarines, but the "whaleback" ship which carried the first cargo of Minnesota iron ore down the Great Lakes in 1892. A total of 4,245 tons of ore were handled that year over Great Northern's docks in Allouez, Wis. In 1951 the railway handled 28½ million tons of ore over its docks, one of the largest installations of its kind in the world.

SCRAP METAL IS CASH "CROP" URGENTLY NEEDED BY STEEL MILLS

America's steelmakers hope to turn out 118 million tons of steel this year.

They cannot produce the steel for domestic and civilian uses in 1952 without scrap—at least 35 million tons of the old, discarded metal now on farms, in towns and cities!

Scrap is a basic ingredient of steel. Production of 1 ton of new steel requires 1,000 pounds of scrap, which is refined metal. Its use cuts down the total time of steelmaking—a vital factor in meeting demands for new steel.

Great Northern recognized long ago the necessity of a constant scrap supply at the blast furnaces, and for years the railway regularly has sent heavy tonnages of discarded metal to the steel mills. However, the steel industry recently urged the nation's railways—a principal source of old metal—to dig deeper for urgently needed scrap.

Great Northern assigned a two-man committee to dig deep throughout the 8,300-mile system for metal parts and equipment no longer useful, but which had escaped scrapping.

The result was 1,623,070 pounds—more than 800 tons!—of badly needed metal scrap to feed the steel mills.

If the nation's steel mills are to operate at full capacity during the remainder of the year they must have 1½ million tons of scrap metal every month. And, next year even more scrap will be needed!

Look around your farm... your place of business... your home for worn out or obsolete metal. Sell it to your local scrap dealer, who knows how urgently it is needed.

Scrap metal is a cash "crop" and every pound turned in means a stronger United States of America!

It means extra bushels...

Sow FLAX Early!

Every agricultural college in the Northwest has conducted experiments to determine the best time for sowing Flax... and they all found that early planting pays! As a result, many of the most successful farmers now put in their Flax ahead of their other grain.

In the first place, Flax stands freezing remarkably well. When 2 or 3 inches high, it may endure temperatures as low as 18° without serious injury. Moreover, Flax thrives in the early spring months when weather is cool and moisture abundant.

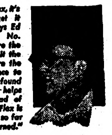
Early planting helps Flax start before the weeds... helps it develop ahead of the hot, dry weather of midsummer... helps it yield more bushels per acre. Carefully conducted tests show that in many years, early Flax yielded twice as much as Flax sown two weeks later.

So plant your Flax early... just as soon as you can get the land ready. Every day counts when it comes to planting Flax.

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA SAYS:

"Experimental results in Minnesota over a 5-year period showed an average decrease in yield of 22 per cent when seeding was delayed just 10 days past the earliest date that a good seedbed could be prepared."

"In putting in Flax, it's important to get it done quick," says Ed Steffes, Arthur, No. Dakota. "Prepare the field, then sow it the same day before the soil has a chance to dry out. We've found early planting helps Flax start ahead of weeds... and Flax is certainly hardy so far as cold is concerned."



Steffes puts in about 500 acres of Flax every year. His yields average about 15 bushels per acre.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

It Isn't the Heat—
It's the Hide!

Big discussion after the Grange meeting Friday night. Tik Anderson was arguing that hogs were lots more affected by the hot weather than cattle. Skeeter Morgan declared that it wasn't so—that he never saw any hogs bothered by the hot sun like his cows were.

I was glad when Rusty Robinson stepped in.

"Boys," he says, "don't get so riled up. It all depends on what color the livestock are. Hogs or cattle, the ones with light-colored coats absorb less heat from the sun's rays than animals with dark coats. So you're both right!"

From where I sit, so many useless arguments could be avoided if a person would remember he doesn't have all the right on his side. Reminds me of folks who insist that coffee, for instance, is the only drink, forgetting that other people have a right to a glass of beer now and then. If we wouldn't get so "het up" about our prejudices—we'd all be better off!

What It Means

The suffix "-ide" in chemical names indicates the combination of one element with another. Thus, sulfur is an element, and so is potassium. The compound made by combining the two is potassium sulfide. In such a name, the -ide ending is used with the non-metallic component.

Coffee Trees

During its ten-year life, the carefully-nurtured coffee tree produces about 30,000 ripe red "cherries," on the average—the equivalent of only 10 to 15 pounds of roasted coffee. It takes 125 billion cups of the beverage to quench America's thirst for it, every year.

Precision Trade

Diamond cutting requires long study of the rough gem as well as steady nerves and hands. A slight mistake in drawing the precise lines of cleavage may cause the stone to fly apart at the final tap of the mallet. An unsuspected flaw is another hazard that may bring about the same disaster.

Tractors are appearing with a "new look." Operators are able to watch all gauges on those now built by J. I. Case Company to burn liquified petroleum gas, through a design styling which mounts a round tank for the fuel crossways on the tractor body.

Administration's Foreign Aid Program Faces Fight in Congress

AID TO ALLIES—Although President Truman and Secretary of State Acheson took to the radio and television in an attempt to gain public support for the administration's $7,900,000,000 program for military and economic aid to our allies, the program faces a bitter test before a money-conscious congress.

The administration feels that the $7,900,000,000 represents a figure that has already been cut to the extreme and has decided to fight any further cuts. Congress, on the other hand, which is considering the largest "peacetime" budget in the nation's history, must find some way to cut the budget and thus reduce deficit spending. An increase in taxes in an election year, which would be necessary if the budget is not slashed, is an unheard of thing. As a result, one of the items that must be cut, from the congressional viewpoint, is foreign aid.

In view of the fact that the United States is attempting to build up a European army, it is unlikely that military aid will be reduced. That leaves the $2,000,000,000 for economic aid. There is strong sentiment in congress for eliminating this item entirely. Aside from the money angle, congressional reaction to the program will be of importance in that military and economic assistance to nations standing up to Soviet communism is a cornerstone of the administration's foreign policy.

An important fact in the coming congressional battle over foreign aid is the fact it is not drawn along strict party lines. A number of Democrats, as well as Republicans, have announced themselves in favor of a great slash in foreign aid funds, some as much as 50 per cent.

POLITICAL NEWS—Sen. Richard B. Russell of Georgia has announced he will seek the Democratic presidential nomination. But the senator did not plunge deeply enough into the political pool to suit the bitter anti-Truman wing of southern Democrats.

He refused to let himself be regarded as the center of an anti-Truman Democratic rebellion should the President be nominated again. He insists that Truman will not be a candidate for re-election, but admitted he had no facts or information upon which to base his belief.

Russell was firm about one thing. "So far as I can see, I will support the Democratic nominee," he said, "but I would not commit myself to support a candidate or a platform injurious to the United States."

Sen. Russell (right) with Sen. Walter F. George, also of Georgia.

U.M.T. BILL—By sending the administration-backed universal military training bill back to committee, the house virtually wiped out any chance of the measure getting through congress this year.

The subject of bitter debate in the house, and just as warmly debated in the home towns of the country, the measure would have made able-bodied youths liable to six months' military training as soon as they reached 18. In addition, it would have kept them in the reserves, and subject to recall, for 7½ years after their training was finished.

The bill's defeat can be attributed to strong opposition by a number of church, farm, educational, and other organizations. President Truman and most military leaders, including Gen. Eisenhower, had endorsed the measure.

The house vote to return the measure to committee will probably sidetrack any action on such a measure in the senate. The measure, however, will come up again. How soon it will be enacted depends a great deal upon how soon the American public becomes educated to the idea.

KOREA—Russia appears so determined to be one of the "neutral" nations to police a Korean truce that it may wreck the peace talks. This, and the insistence of the Communists that all prisoners of war be returned regardless of their wishes in the matter, have brought the talks to a standstill and what appears a final deadlock.

As for the first demand, an Allied officer recently told the Reds: "I now tell you formally, unequivocally and with the fullest authorization that the U.N. command's decision to reject the Soviet Union as a member of the neutral nation supervisory commission is final and irrevocable. Further debate on this subject is completely futile."

On the prisoner issue, Allied negotiators have been equally firm. They told the Communists there was "no possibility" they would ever agree to deliver prisoners who had to be forced to return to Communist territory.

These exchanges have increased the atmosphere of distrust and bitterness which has surrounded the talks for months. As for the peace, it seems as far from becoming a fact as the day the talks began. There have been hints that a new offensive will be launched if the peace talks collapse.

UNEMPLOYMENT—Although unemployment in the United States as a whole is near a record low, the nation is faced with a serious unemployment problem. The problem is caused by the fact the unemployment is centered in a number of definite areas while the country is in the midst of general prosperity.

As an example, Detroit has had a high rate of unemployment for a considerable period of time, due chiefly to curbs on materials for consumer goods, in this case automobiles.

According to a government agency, total unemployment in the country is about 2,100,000. Spread evenly across the country the figure would cause no concern. However, they are in pools that dot the map, most of them in the east, a few in the midwest.

How to remedy the situation is a problem now under study by the Department of Labor. The department will attempt to find long-term answers for these high unemployment areas, many of which are small towns whose economy is based on coal and textile industries.

The Marine Corps demonstrates its new nylon bullet-resistant body armor which is worn by Leathernecks on patrol in Korea. Primary purpose of the 8-pound jacket, which will stop a .45 caliber bullet, is to guard against fragmentation ammunition, the cause of 70 per cent of all combat casualties.

RURAL HEALTH

Rural Health Progress Is Too Slow

The closing session of the National Conference on Rural Health, sponsored by the American Medical association in co-operation with farm organizations, was told by farm leaders that the medical profession isn't moving fast enough in promoting rural health.

In addition, farm leaders charged the medical profession as a whole doesn't yet understand the problem of serving rural people.

One speaker, Ferdie Deering, last president of the Agricultural Editors' association, warned the medical men that farmers might turn to the government for aid in better meeting their needs for health services if they didn't get help they needed from the medical associations and individual doctors in their localities.

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: Orphan Gay Gaynor hopes to enter nurse's training at Bessemer Memorial hospital, aided by her friend Dr. Borden, who is striving to remove the hospital board's prejudice against orphan girls with uncertain family backgrounds. Gay is fond of Dr. Borden, but makes every effort to avoid the doctor's son, Thad, whom she detests because he taunted her once and kissed her against her will. Gay and her friend and housekeeper, Myra, worry about Dr. Borden's failing health. They feel that he is bearing the whole burden of keeping the citizens of Bessemer in good health and should slow down and let some one else share the burden.

CHAPTER XI

"I'm perfectly all right, Myra," she assured her. Then she said, somewhat doubtfully, "I sent for an application, Myra."

"Application? What for?"

"I want to join the class that's entering Memorial in July."

"July!" Myra cried. "But Doc said you was to rest the whole summer. You ain't strong enough to do no hard work yet. Why'd you do it, Gay?"

Gay Begins Living A Normal Life

"Because I'm tired of doing nothing—of being idle and—and—useless," the girl replied passionately.

"Umph!" The older woman's voice was gruff. "You ain't useless, Gay. You never could be useless—even if you done nothing the rest of your life you'd be useful to me—just having you here with me makes everything all right—for me."

"You're sweet," the girl said softly. "But just the same, I want to get to work. I'm perfectly well. These two months have done wonders for me and—well—I'm getting uneasy—restless—and should be working."

"I don't know what Doc'll say," Myra demurred.

"I think he will give me a clean bill of health—when he understands, Myra," Gay assured her. "Anyway, I know how I feel better than anyone else, and I'm sure I was never in better condition in my life than I am right now."

"But what am I a-going to do without you?" Myra wailed.

"Just as you have been doing. I hope you will stay on with me—keep the house on Belfort Street so that I'll always have a home to come back to on my free periods."

"It's going to be awful lonesome——" the woman murmured.

"Nonsense!" Gay chided. "You've never been lonesome in your life and you know it. You have lots of friends—invite them to visit you—entertain them if you like. My home is yours, you know. It wouldn't be home without you."

Myra dashed a work-worn hand across her eyes. "They ain't never been nobody like you—ever, Frances Gaynor," she whimpered. "But just the same——"

"Forget it, darling," Gay said. "I haven't gone yet—I may not be accepted. Perhaps Bessemer Memorial will object to a product of Bethesda as a member of its nursing staff. Could be, you know."

"I'd like to know why," Myra cried belligerently.

"Oh, I don't know. The Board of Managers is pretty fussy, they tell me. Each applicant has to be thoroughly investigated as to background, scholarship, physical condition, moral and religious training——"

"What's all that got to do with nursing sick folks?" Myra wanted to know. "When a body's sick he don't give a hoot if the person giving him a bath or medicine's a Methodist or—or a Freethinker. Or if his folks come over on the Mayflower or sneaked in on some immigrant ship with two copper cents in his jeans. Rubbish! Who's on that Board, Gay? The Pooles, I bet a dollar—sounds just like 'em. Riff-raff's what they be. Don't you mind 'em, Gay. They ain't one of 'em fit to wipe your shoes. I could tell 'em plenty. They just better had accept your application."

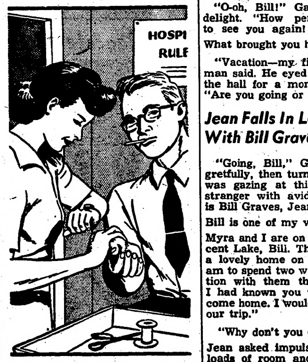
And on Wednesday Gay received the application blank and proceeded to fill it out pending consultation with the doctor. She and Myra drove over to Bessemer one morning and made a thorough inventory of her wardrobe, making a list of things to be purchased—uniforms, hose, shoes, etc. They made a visit to the rectory where Doctor Marvin gave her a letter of recommendation, gathered up two others, one from Mr. Wilkie, the druggist, and the other from Jerome Bailey. Doctor Borden shook his head when Gay first broached the subject to him, but after examination he changed his mind and pronounced her health perfect. Gay was jubilant and she drove back to the lake through the late afternoon sunshine with a feeling of peace in her heart. The first real peace she had known in many months.

She hadn't long to wait for the reply from the hospital. It came four days later. The letter of acceptance was cordial in the extreme and Gay and Myra prepared to move back to Belfort Street early the following week.

Gay took to training as a duck takes to water. She loved it. None of it seemed particularly strange or arduous to her. She had served a difficult apprenticeship in Bethesda and found that in many ways the work in Memorial was far easier.

At least there was no Mrs. Overton to contend with—no long diatribes in which she and every one in the institution was blamed, criticized and condemned unheard. The criticisms now were for the most part constructive.

For the first time since Miss Alden's death, Gay was completely happy. She had work to do—work that she loved—and for the first time she was living a normal life with girls of her own age. The probationary period was completed successfully and she received her cap. The class was unusually large for Bessemer Memorial — twelve girls passed the gruelling three month's test—five flunked out. Gay felt a great sympathy for those five.



Gay took to training as a duck takes to water.

During the first year of her training she was kept pretty much in the wards and made a fine record. Her free periods were spent at Number Seventeen Belfort Street with Myra. She had little outside social life, for she had few friends in Bessemer and since Miss Alden's death most of the intimates of Aunt Grace had given small indication they wished to continue their former cordial relations. If the girl felt their withdrawal she gave no sign. Larry Boothe continued to call on her from time to time and they went to the movies and on rare occasions to a dance. Gay was an excellent dancer and Larry found her a delightful companion. He was serious, rather reserved and although his position at the paper mills was exceptional and well paid, he had his mother and younger sister to support and hadn't too much money to spend. Gay liked him for his many fine traits but felt no least romantic thrill at his attentions.

Vivian Leaves Adrian, Visits Bessemer

Sometimes the girls teased her about him but she accepted their jibes good-naturedly. What irked her was their occasional sly hints about one or another of the internes or young Doctor Borden who often came to the hospital. Gay had no time for internes, whom she instinctively resented, and continued to ignore the young doctor as she had done while she was with Miss Alden. Thad was now associated with his father, although his name was not yet on the sign swinging from the post beside the office door.

Vivian Poole D'Archer was back in Bessemer Gossip had it that she and her artist husband had separated—were to be divorced. She was more beautiful — more glamorous than ever and also far more arrogant. She had little to do with any of the townspeople but guests from New York, Boston and points east and south constantly filled the Poole mansion. Sara Poole boasted that the family was seldom alone any more. Vivian in her smart sports roadster could be seen speeding to and from the Country Club or along the quiet country roads to some distant beach or roadhouse, at all hours of the day or night—always with three or four guests crowded into it. She rode a tall black horse whose gleaming satin coat set off her white-clad blond beauty to perfection. Sometimes Thad Borden accompanied her and his father's friends shook their heads. Gay sometimes wondered if perhaps they would eventually marry. The house Sam Poole had built for her was long since completed and stood empty, except for a caretaker, on the hill not far from the Poole mansion. Vivian and her artist husband had never occupied it. People remembered that it had been planned when Vivian was engaged to marry Thad, and they talked and conjectured—even prophesied—but no one seemed to know.

Gay had encountered them at the hospital bazaar only last spring. She had pretended not to see them but couldn't help hearing Vivian as she pointed her out to her escort. The word "Bethesda" was quite audible. Gay hoped she hadn't changed color. She should be inured to it by this time.

It was during that summer that Bill Graves came back to Bessemer for a week's vacation. He arrived at the Belfort Street house just as Gay and Myra were preparing to leave for Crescent Lake to be guests of the Spencers for two weeks of Gay's vacation. Jean and her mother had come into town in the Spencer station wagon. It stood before the side porch while Jean and Gay packed and Mrs. Spencer helped Myra close the house.

"O-oh, Bill!" Gay exclaimed in delight. "How perfectly splendid to see you again! You're grown! What brought you here?"

"Vacation—my first," the young man said. He eyed the suitcases in the hall for a moment and asked, "Are you going or coming?"

Jean Falls In Love With Bill Graves

"Going, Bill," Gay told him regretfully, then turning to Jean who was gazing at this tall attractive stranger with avid interest. "This is Bill Graves, Jean—Jean Spencer. Bill is one of my very best friends. Myra and I are on our way to Crescent Lake, Bill. The Spencers have a lovely home on the shore and I am to spend two weeks of my vacation with them there. Oh, I wish I had known you were planning to come home. I would have postponed our trip."

"Why don't you come, too, Bill?" Jean asked impulsively. "We have loads of room and I'm sure Mom—my mother—will welcome you with open arms. Here she is now."

Myra, who had followed Mrs. Spencer into the hall, gave a little squeal of delight when she saw the newcomer. She caught hold to the young man's two hands extended to her and swung them between them while she gazed up at him in fond admiration. "Bill Graves," she challenged, "you've grown!"

At her daughter's whispered insistence Mrs. Spencer urged Bill to accompany them to the lake and Bill was only too glad to accept. It would give him a chance to be with Gay and that's what he had hoped but didn't dare expect. They stopped at the hotel for Bill's luggage and drove on to the Spencer home in the warm summer twilight.

This was one of the happiest times Gay had ever experienced. She watched Jean fall headlong in love with Bill—watched the young man's struggle to maintain his old loyalties and at last, on the day he prepared to leave for New York, saw his defenses crumble and go down before the frank and open adoration of Jean Spencer. Jean drove him back to Bessemer in the early morning, refusing Gay's offer to accompany them, and returned starry-eyed to announce that she was really and truly in love for all time.

Her mother looked worried at the announcement and Gay tried to set her mind at rest. Mrs. Spencer acknowledged she liked Bill, but who were his people—what about his background—his prospects—his habits, etc.

"He's an orphan, Mom, and—I'm going to marry him," Jean told her. "Like Gay, he was raised in Bethesda. He's an artist—an illustrator—and I know he's a good one, even if he is young. He's going to be famous some day, but even if he weren't—I love him and—I'm going to marry him."

Mrs. Spencer was troubled. She shook her head. "He didn't say anything to me," she pointed out. "When did all this happen—his proposal, I mean?"

"Don't be dumb, darling," her daughter chided. "Why do you suppose I drove him to Bessemer this morning—alone? He didn't want to ask me—he's shy, sensitive, afraid we were snobs, but I knew he loved me and I—I made him tell me so. A girl has to use her head these days if she wants to get anywhere. Oh, he's coming out again when Pop's home, but I don't care what anyone says or does, I love him and I'm going to marry him." Her eyes sparkled and her cheeks flushed with excitement. She was very pretty.

"I don't know what your brother will say," her mother murmured.

"He adores you, you know, and he worries about you. Dear me, I feel I have been very negligent."

World Population Up In Postwar Period

Resurgence of births and declining mortality in large areas of the globe have resulted in a spurt in world population during the postwar period.

In the United States the annual excess of births over deaths has averaged better than 15 per 1,000 population, which is above the level immediately following World War I, and about twice the rate during the depression decade of the 1930's.

The trend has been similar in Canada and New Zealand.

In France, where virtually no population gains had been made for a century, and where as recently as 1940-1944 deaths exceeded births, the rate of natural increase has averaged better than 7 per 1,000 each year since 1946. In Ireland, which had been losing population for a century, the excess of births over deaths has been somewhat more than 8 per 1,000 during the past six years.

APPLETON, MINN. . . .

When Chief Warrant Officer Henry Halvorson came home to Appleton on a 30-day leave from Korea, one of his first visits was to the headquarters of "HOME TOWN CALLING"—the combination office and study in the home of Mrs A. E. Arntzen, where the names and service addresses of nearly 200 GI's from Appleton, Louisburg, Correll and Holloway are maintained. Every month each serviceman is assigned a different Appleton "sponsor"—whose duty it is to write the GI a letter or send him a gift. The Appleton "HOME TOWN CALLING" project recently received national recognition over Associated Press news wires. (Photo by Appleton Press)

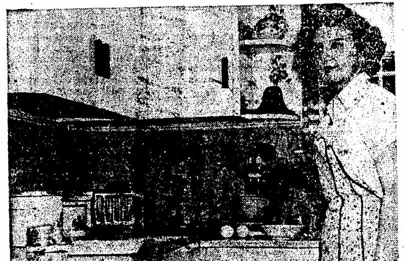
Wire Rural Home With Room to Grow



FARM folks should consider electricity that "extra hired hand" necessary to do a job, according to an article in nationally circulated Capper's Farmer by E. H. Smith of Kansas State College.

"Electricty is an efficient worker that operates milking machines, runs ventilating fans, heats hotbeds, supplies power for electric clippers, dries the women's hair, delivers water to the stanchion cups, water tanks, sinks and bathtubs and runs the corn sheller and drill press—all at an amazingly low cost," says the article in the magazine read by 1,250,000 farm families.

"The future holds a hundred other uses for electricity on the farm. So the smart owner, when he puts in electric service, will insist on a wiring job that will not only take care of present needs but will serve equipment and appliances he is likely to have 5 or 10 years from now.

"Nowhere in the house is the need for convenience outlets so great as in the kitchen. Shown above is a double convenience outlet at counter or working height—an important item from the standpoint of use. Locate the outlets in the work areas and have plenty so it will not be necessary to take the electric clock plug to use the electric mixer, coffee maker or waffle irons. Some homemakers like an outlet near the breakfast or dining table for the toaster. Conveniently located outlets should be provided for the home freezer and refrigerator."

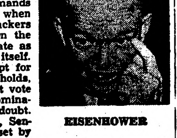
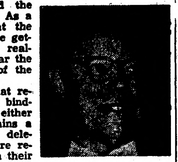
Gen. Eisenhower, Sen. Kefauver Win in New Hampshire Election



EISENHOWER



TAFT

NEW HAMPSHIRE—Political dopesters, both Republican and Democrat, have spent days trying to read a national trend into the results of the New Hampshire preferential primary. No one can be sure how the results can be applied to the nation as a whole, but there are several noteworthy facts as a result of the election which the average home town voter can apply to his own area.

General Eisenhower's victory is an indication of the respect and popularity he commands from the average voter. This is important when it is remembered that Eisenhower backers made no all-out effort in the contest. On the other hand, Senator Taft stumped the state as if campaigning in the presidential race itself.

There is one obvious conclusion. Except for Ohio, and perhaps, a few other strongholds, Eisenhower appears to be the GOP's best vote getter. Whether or not he can get the nomination, of course, still remains in serious doubt.

On the Democratic side of the picture, Senator Kefauver pulled something of an upset by defeating President Truman, who had the state's Democratic machine behind him. As a result, it is reasonable to assume that the Tennessee senator has a far greater vote getting potential than political forecasters realized, or President Truman is so unpopular the votes went to Kefauver as a protest of the Truman administration and policies.

It should be remembered, however, that results of the preferential contest are not binding on the state's convention delegates, either Republican or Democrat. Taft still retains a majority of the Republican convention delegates. Encouraged by the New Hampshire result, Eisenhower backers may now begin their all-out drive to corral delegates and thus the nomination.

Kefauver's victory in New Hampshire does not mean he is as popular in other sections of the country. Truman still has the nomination tied up if he wants it. Some observers believe, however, Truman will now hasten his decision about running, if he has not already made up his mind. By a quick announcement he might check growing Kefauver popularity.

DEADLOCK—With peace talks deadlocked over prisoner exchange and what nations will supervise the armistice, if one is ever negotiated, the big question on the battlefront is what effect spring will have on the two armies which have faced each other for nearly two years.

In this connection, Gen. James A. Van Fleet, U.S. Eighth Army commander, indulged in a little speculation. The commander reported the Chinese and Korean Reds have built up a force of 900,000 men in Korea. He added that the Reds have more men, weapons, and planes than the Allies.

But he does not believe the Reds will launch a spring offensive, but if they did he would welcome it and stop it cold.

"I am confident we could stop any attack the Communists might throw at us", he said. "It would be a good thing if we could get those people out of their foxholes and dugouts to mow them down the way we did last April and May."

As for possible Allied plans, the general said: "The future operations of the Eighth Army are still on the conference table at Panmunjom."

That was not saying very much, but it is generally believed there will be no all-out Allied offensive unless the truce talks collapse completely. If they should, then the people of the home towns of America must steel themselves for the explosion that of necessity must follow. It could mean an all-out war in Asia.

Meanwhile, the Department of Defense reported the latest American casualty total in Korea at 106,458. Of the total, 18,505 are known to have been killed.

TAXES—The all-powerful house-senate economic committee reportedly has agreed that there should be no general increase in tax rates this year. It was not exactly surprising news to the nation's taxpayers, since congressional opposition has been expressed from the moment President Truman announced his record $85,000,000,000 spending budget.

The committee went on record as favoring a $10,000,000,000 cut in the budget. By closing existing tax loopholes, the $10 billion budget cut, and with surpluses which go into government trust funds, the committee said it believed the budget could be balanced.

The President had asked congress to close the tax loopholes in his annual economic report, but had also asked an increase in taxation by whatever additional was necessary to boost government income by $5,000,000,000 a year.

AVERAGE FAMILY—A recent economic survey reveals there has been such a vast shift in income distribution in the United States in the past 20 years it can be classed as a social revolution.

The survey reveals the very poor have become fewer by two-thirds of their 1939 number. And the poor have become better off. Where three out of four families had incomes of less than $2,000 a year in 1939, only one out of three fell into that class ten years later.

The well-to-do and the rich have become more numerous. In the late thirties, one family in about 50 was in the $5,000 and over income class, and one out of 100 was in the $10,000 and over class. Ten years later, one family out of six was in the $5,000 and over class, and one out of twenty in the $10,000 and over class.

Over the years the very rich have become poorer because the rise in labor incomes has been accompanied by a decline in property incomes. The share of the upper 1 per cent of income receivers in total incomes has declined in 35 years from 16 per cent to 9 per cent.

NEW WATCH—A fantastic achievement in the science of timekeeping was revealed when Elgin researchers took the wraps off their latest development—a conventional sized wrist watch that stores its own source of electrical power and will operate more than a year before its tiny "energy capsule" expires.

World's tiniest cell, a powerful energy capsule smaller than a penny in volume, provides power for new electronic watch.

The electronic watch of tomorrow is still in the laboratory but its sponsors claim it will eventually revolutionize personal timekeeping. Its motor, the smallest practical unit ever built, replaces the mainspring which has been used in all watches made the past 450 years. Also eliminated is the winding mechanism, since the energy capsule does that job.

The capsule itself, smaller in volume than a penny, discharges power at such a constant rate that the new watch will keep perfect time. And when it expires, a watchmaker will be able to insert a new one in a few minutes at nominal cost.

Some estimate of the infinitesimal size of Elgin's "power plant" was given in the description that 10,000,000 electronic watches could be operated from the power consumed by a single 100-watt light bulb. And eventually they hope to make it smaller still, applying the same principle to a woman's watch.

GAMBLING TAX

Yield Far Less Than Congress Expected

The internal revenue bureau reports the government's new gambling license and tax has yielded far less than expected when it was enacted. The total yield from November through January was a mere $1,455,393. When congress passed the license law, it was estimated that the annual yield would be 400 million dollars.

Sales of the $50 a year occupation stamp in November, December, and January netted $484,429 from 16,029 professional gamblers. The 10 per cent tax on gross receipts amounted to $970,964. For December, the first full month to which the tax was applied, the return was $759,182. The 10 per cent tax on gross business for January has not been tabulated and is not included in the total gross receipts.

SPORTSMAN'S HORIZON

By JIM RHODY

Beware Poor Land

Experience has taught the veteran quail hunter, regardless of the lack of thought he may have given the matter, to go along with Louis Bromfield's observation, "Poor land produces poor crops, poor stock, and poor people," might well be amended to include "poor game." Given the opportunity he will, almost instinctively, select as his hunting territory a fertile farm, offering ample food and a diversity of game habitat.

We believe it was Dr. R. W. Eschmeyer, the noted fish biologist, who jokingly said the way to spot a farm pond that is full of fish is to notice how well the farm-houses and barns are painted. The better the paint job, the better the fishing. His reasoning was that if the buildings are well maintained, it is because the farmer is prosperous. If the farmer is prosperous, it is because his land is fertile. If the land is fertile, the pond also will be fertile, and the fertile pond will support the most fish. We can't report on how his theory works out in practice, but it sounds logical.

Weeds Not Enough

It is self-evident that non-fertile land cannot produce the luxuriant growths and abundant food supply requisite for carrying a large quantity of game through the critical winter and breeding seasons. Poor land, especially if it has been overgrazed, is highly productive of weeds, but weeds alone are not enough to satisfy fully the needs of game birds and animals. They are fine for mice, but who wants to go mouse hunting?

Less self-evident is the fact that foods grown on neglected worn-out land are deficient in minerals and vitamins that are as important to animals as they are to man. Their degree of importance is indicated by the fact that some animals can detect their presence, or note their absence, in the food they eat. For instance, a hog given free choice will eat from a pile of corn raised from good soil in preference to an equally sized pile raised on a poor farm. Of further importance is the possibility that living in poor habitat and under general adverse conditions alters breeding habits and reduces the reproductive capacity of animals. Leopold suspected this; later observations lend credance to his suspicions. Quite possibly the two phenomena are related.

About Predators

Predator control may help to protect our small game but if we concentrate our attention on killing the predators we should not overlook the fact that our quail or grouse may be suffering most from lack of proper food or cover—the biologist might say that the habitat is inadequate.

Such measures as bounties, artificial propagation, closed seasons, game sanctuaries have not provided the answers to proper management of our game and fish, though they may continue to be useful tools of the wildlife manager for special situations. Any useful tool for land or wildlife management should not be overlooked, nor should the hunting and trapping of foxes and other predators by farmers and others be discouraged where overpopulations exist. The problem is a big one and all interested people can do their part.

Nearly everyone who enjoys getting out-of-doors has the urge to do something for the wildlife. Some feed songbirds, some attend conservation classes or help with projects, others belong to sportsmen's clubs, while many find their biggest thrills in listening to barbershop stories. Nevertheless, the interest is there. When we are interested and enthused we want action and it is human nature to act upon the obvious first. Too often, we tackle the symptoms rather than the disease, and in our haste, we are too human to realize, or admit, that man himself is often responsible for his own misfortune on this earth.

Spoon Hooks

When using a spoon hook as a casting lure it is well to select one not too large as the air and water resistance hampers accurate and easy casting, and retrieving is difficult. Spoons size 3 to 5 are generally fine for pickerel and northern pike, or large wall-eyed pike. The spoon for muskellunge should be 7 or 8. Larger sizes are better adapted for trolling. A line that is too light will cause additional twisting, so it is well to employ a line of from 18 pound to 20 pound test when casting.

△ △ △

Changing Plugs

This tip is particularly for bass fishermen who like to angle for these wary fellows after dark. Make a double loop in the end of your line about six inches long and then tie another knot in the end of the loop so as to leave a small loop about a quarter inch long. To attach the plug, pass the small loop through the eye of the plug, then lift the large loop over the plug and pull tight. To remove the plug merely pull the small loop.

American Farmer Big User of Electricity

A startling ten-year rise in farm electrification has made the American farmer one of the nation's biggest users of electric power.

The farmer is now receiving more than twice as much farm high-line service as in 1940. Moreover, the amount of electricity used by farmers has increased nearly five times, and the average use per farmer has more than doubled.

American farms are now using in excess of 15 billion kilowatt hours of electricity a year, while in 1940 they consumed only 3½ billion. In addition, the number of farms serviced by electric power—about two million in 1940—has leaped to approximately five million. The average kilowatt hours of power used per farm, exclusive of irrigation projects in the West, has increased from about 1000 ten years ago to 2300 today.

The farmer is just beginning on the road toward complete rural electrification. Many new electric devices will be aiding the farmer in his struggle for higher output. Things like automatic poultry feeders, crop-drying equipment, automatic barn cleaners, silo unloaders, wagon unloaders, and feed handling equipment are all a part of the American farmer's future.

RESIDENT NURSE

A SERIAL STORY

BY LUCY AGNES HANCOCK

THE STORY SO FAR: The Bessemer hospital staff, influenced by Dr. Borden, accepts Gay Gaynor as a nurse trainee, despite the objection of some snobbish members of the board against admitting orphans with unknown family background to the hospital staff. Gay's ambition is to become a children's nurse and resident nurse of the Bethesda orphanage, her former "home." She is fond of Dr. Borden but dislikes his son, Thad. Thad has resumed his friendship with Mrs. Vivian Poole D'Archer, "glamour queen" and daughter of the richest man in Bessemer. Thad once teased Gay and insulted her by forcefully kissing her at a picnic where he was an intruder.

CHAPTER XII

Gay had been at the hospital nearly two years now. Two busy, exciting, happy years. Spring was late this year and the hospital was full to overflowing. Gay was on floor duty one afternoon and sat at a desk in an alcove of the long corridor on the ritzy "Park Avenue" floor, when the Doctors Borden, accompanied by Vivian D'Archer appeared. Gay knew that one of the numerous cousins of Mrs. Poole had a room on this floor and was convalescing from an abdominal operation. The elder Borden stopped for a moment to chat with her. Vivian and Thad walked on, when suddenly Vivian turned to stare at the young nurse.

"What is she doing here, Thad?" she asked, her voice low but quite audible.

Vivian Insults Gay In Hospital Corridor

"In training," the young man answered. "Come on, Viv. We don't have to wait for Dad."

"But I thought Memorial — I thought there was a certain standard—that only girls of breeding—of good families were admitted for training. I must say——" The voice had risen slightly and Doctor Borden, his face flushed in consternation, tried to distract Gays' attention. But Gay heard even as it was intended she should, although her manner showed nothing of the inner conflict she was enduring. Thad took his companion's arm and tried to draw her on, but the young woman refused to move. "I'm sure Mama isn't aware of this, Thad. Mama is on the Board of Managers and I'm very certain she would never approve of lowering the standard to——"

"That will be quite enough, Vivian," Doctor Borden said sternly. "You and Thad go on," he continued more quietly. "I have things to discuss with Miss Gaynor. Don't wait for me. Do you understand?" The last was almost an order and Gay couldn't repress a smile. Perhaps it was the smile that did it, for an angry, "Well, I must say" reached her as Thad hurried the irate Mrs. D'Archer on down the long corridor. Doctor Borden looked flustered and ashamed. Gay patted the hand on the table before her.

"Don't mind too much, Doctor," she soothed. "I don't. She can't hurt me—I just won't let her."

"But her mother——"

"I doubt if even she can. After all, the Chief of Staff has the final word as to the suitability of the members of his staff. Doctor Cushing is a big man, my friend. It will take more than the petty spite of a couple of silly women to make him dismiss one of his staff. He has been very kind to me—but then they all have. I'm not in the least afraid of the Pooles singly or en masse."

An hour later, Thad Borden stopped before the desk at which she was sitting and said quickly, "I'm sorry Vivian chose to be so disagreeable, Gay—Miss Gaynor. It isn't at all like her."

"No?" was Gay's only comment.

The young man gazed at the bowed head with its snowy cap and felt unaccountably ashamed. He admired this girl who had fought so valiantly for a chance to make something of herself. Fought against great odds—the clannishness of a small town—the snobbery and bigotry of a lot of the rich nobodies. The Pooles! And who were the Pooles to act so all-fired snooty?

"I'm sorry," he said again. Gay said nothing. She turned a page and stared unseeing at the printed words. "I said I'm sorry," he repeated. "Aren't you going to say anything."

"What is there to say? the girl asked, eyes on her book. "You're sorry—so what?"

An angry light flashed for a moment in the dark eyes fixed on her. "What a rotten disposition you've got! I've always heard that redheads had hot, quick tempers, but I never knew one to bear a grudge forever. You do, don't you?"

The gray eyes lifted for a moment and she said icily, although her throat was thick with anger, "My disposition is none of your business, Doctor Borden, and don't flatter yourself that I bear any grudge against either you or—or your friend. I have never spared either of you a thought. You are both strangers to me and I intend you shall remain so." Again she turned a page and found herself trembling as, with a muttered imprecation, Thad Borden, M.D., turned, but before he stalked down the corridor, he said grimly, "Some day I'm going to break through that shell of complacency, Frances Gaynor. That's a promise."

"I don't frighten easily, Doctor Borden," she replied and scarcely recognized that it was her own voice speaking. She wondered why he persisted in annoying her and why the very sight of him, his smug good looks and air of well-being, should make her see red. "I know it's wicked and hurtful to hate," she told herself, staring unseeing at the book before her, "but I think I cordially hate those two and if I never saw either of them again it would make my life much more comfortable. I love his father—he's everything his son isn't. Darn it! I'm not going to think about him—them. They aren't worth it."

"What is she doing here, Thad?" she asked, her voice low but quite audible.

"So you have money in the bank. Lucky gal!" Mildred Matson jibed as she came to stand before the table in the alcove. "From the sinister mutterings and the scowl on your face it is evidently giving you little satisfaction. How about reducing the burden of wealth by loaning me a couple of hundred?"

Gay smiled. "Money? What's money, anyway? If I was frowning, Mat, it was purely reflex action—or maybe facial gymnastics. What's new inside? Mrs. Fordham leaves tomorrow, doesn't she? Then where do you go?"

"I have three days rest period—or should have after the time I've had with that dame. She's dozing right now or she'd be thinking of a dozen jobs for her long-suffering nurse. Let us hope she sleeps until I go off duty. Too bad they couldn't have removed that disposition. It hasn't improved one whit by taking out her gall bladder. In fact, I think it's worse—if that were possible.

"Pills and Platitudes To a Lot of Dames"

Gay laughed, her anger forgotten. Mildred Matson had one of the sunniest, most unruffled natures in the world. The girls loved to listen while she raved, knowing well that her patient, no matter how trying and unappreciative, saw only the best side of her. She was a fine nurse and Gay liked to think that some day she would be her equal. Serene, happy in her work, competent and efficient to handle any and all cases. It pleased her to feel that the older nurse liked her and she tried to prove worthy of her friendship.

"I suppose you saw the ex-love-birds?" Matson asked examining a broken fingernail. "Beautiful, isn't she, and what clothes!" She whistled softly and grinned at the girl before her. "Somehow I never could see her marrying a small-town medico, Gay. But what's happened to her marriage—that appeared to have been made in—you know where? Why, I understood, or at least heard, that she and that artist husband of hers were riding high—on the crest of the wave of love. Is it definitely off?. Is it Reno in the offing, Gay? Maybe she's out to get our Thad after all—the poor lug! If he marries that one he'll never settle down in this hick town."

"I don't know a thing about it, but it wouldn't surprise me in the least. After all, they were engaged, you know—once upon a time."

"He specialized, didn't he? Shouldn't be difficult for him to land in some cushy job handing out pills and platitudes to a lot of dames with more money than brains. Anyway, he's too good-looking for a small-town doctor. Not a bit like his dad, is he? Now there's a man! I wonder why he hasn't been nabbed by some designing female, Gay? S-say, maybe Smitty's working on him."

"Don't be too sure," the other said with conviction. "He's game worth any woman's stalking—maybe—I don't know," she mused whimsically, "a girl might do worse—especially a girl past her first youth."

Gay eyed her for a moment with mixed feelings. Was Matson joking? Perhaps she was talking about someone else. Then again, maybe she had designs of her own. Mildred Matson was in her early thirties, charming although not beautiful, but pleasant and efficient. Yes, Gay told herself, she would make a fine wife for some man—even Doctor Borden.

"Don't look so dubious, Gaynor," the nurse grinned. "You certainly are not very complimentary. And don't tell me you have designs on him yourself—at your age! And, by the way, I notice he always looks you up when he comes here. Is that it, Gay?"

Gay's denial was emphatic. "Don't be ridiculous! I adore Doctor Borden but I'm most certainly not in love with him and I'm equally sure he's not with me. He's a prince — wonderful — everything you can imagine, but——"

"You're not having any, I think the son would suit you better——" She paused at the look on Gay's face. "Gosh, darling! I was only joking. This has all been a case of letting off steam. Forget it."

"Of course," Gay murmured, ashamed of her sudden anger. "And I assure you my blessing is yours if you definitely decide to take him on. More power to you, Matson."

Nurse Matson Implies She Loves Dr. Borden

The other nurse came swiftly around the table and took Gay's shoulders in firm hands. "You idiot!" she stormed. "If you so much as hint—so much as mention my name to him—I'll—I'll shake you until your teeth rattle. I mean it. I respect Doctor Borden far too much to have him mixed up in a cheap matrimonial scramble." Her face was flushed and her eyes gravely concerned. Gay felt a wave of sympathy. Matson really liked Doctor Borden—maybe she even loved him. She smiled into the face so near her own.

"I know, Mat" she said, straightening her cap which had been knocked askew by the impetuous older nurse. "We all chatter a lot of meaningless bunk, don't we? But just the same, I think you'd just about suit him. I actually believe you're good enough for him—and that's saying a lot because I know him."

Mildred Matson said nothing for a moment. A light showed above the door of 142 where Mrs. Fordham was supposed to be sleeping, and she hurried away saying over her shoulder, "Forget it." But Gay didn't forget it.

There was a knock on the door and Kitty, the maid, put her head inside. "You're wanted in the reception room, Miss Gaynor. A man!" she whispered.

"Mr. Boothe?" Gay asked, smoothing her hair

"I didn't see him. Mrs. Anderson let him in. I was busy. Prob-ly is, though. It's usually him comes to see you. Quiet, ain't he?"

They went down the stairs together, Gay answering the girl's questions absently. She felt sure it was Larry, although he invariably phoned to see if she was free. The sound of laughter and excited voices reached her as she approached the reception room and she recalled it was the evening of the committee meeting to complete plans for the spring dance. She was surprised to see Larry Boothe the center of a group of nurses all talking at once while he tried to explain something to them. She paused just inside the door.

"Don't bother to explain, Larry," Betty Johnson told him, patting the arm nearest her. "You just go ahead and take charge. We'll give you a list of things we want and hand over the money. You do the rest. A man can manage things so much easier than a girl can. Don't let them browbeat you. They should be only too glad to let us have their old hall free—and maybe provide the refreshments and orchestra as well. Point out to them our prestige—glamour—what have you. Use the old high pressure salesmanship—your masculine powers of persuasion."

Larry caught sight of Gay in the doorway and held up his hand in protest. "Help! I'm being shanghaied!" The others turned, laughing at his exaggerated distress.

"Make him do it, Gay," Johnson cried.

"I don't imagine he needs much urging," Gay smiled. "I think he is going to enjoy helping you."

Minnesota Farmers Use More Fertilizer For Growing Crops

MINNESOTA farmers used approximately 250,660 tons of fertilizer in growing their crops last year, according to a statement by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, based on statistics compiled by the National Fetilizer Association. This was the highest consumption ever recorded in the state and represented an increase of 35,673 tons compared with 1948.

Fertilizer consumption in Minnesota was 19 times as great in 1949 as it was 10 years ago. In 1939, only 13,455 tons of fertilizer were used on Minnesota farms.

For the entire United States the 1949 fertilizer consumption totaled 18,579,000 tons. This was the highest in history and exceeded the 1948 record by 623,000 tons. More than twice as much plant food was used in the United States last year as in 1939, when the total consumption was 7,707,000 tons.

The steadily increasing use of fertilizer on the nation's farms in the past 10 years is attributed to these factors: (1) Fertilizer has proved profitable in boosting crop yields per acre, cutting production costs and increasing net income. (2) Plant food gives a high return for every dollar invested. (3) Fertilizer is a "good buy" for farmers. Prices of fertilizer have remained very reasonable compared with prices of other commodities purchased by farmers and with prices received by farmers for their products.

Soil Building Job Should Be Put On Year-Round Basis

THERE is no "closed season" for applying soil building amounts of commercial fertilizer on the heavier soils, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in citing recent research by Dr. W. A. Albrecht, chairman of the soils department of the University of Missouri, and A. W. Klemme, extension soils specialist.

Soil building amounts of plant food can be added any time machinery can be driven over the fields, according to these soils research men. The fertilizer application need not be timed with crop planting. It can be put on well in advance, whenever the ground is firm and labor is available.

The research men report that on most clay or silt loam soils of Missouri, the clay fraction of the soil has a high capacity for holding fertilizer. Thus very little of any plant food materials will leach down through the soil. This is particularly true if there is some growing crop which will catch the plant nutrients applied in more soluble form.

However, fertilizer in the row is still needed by crops to give them the quick start and sturdy growth needed for top yields.

Soil tests indicate good results from putting mineral nutrients on the soil during the regular operations of preparing the seedbed for the next crop, the agronomists report.

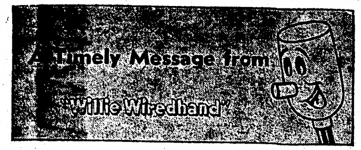
Too Big For Any Highway

"BRUTUS," THE NICKNAME given this behemoth by driver Ralph Johnson of Keewatin, Minn., has never been on a highway. One of the world's biggest trucks, it is used for hauling ore and waste material in an iron mine. "Brutus" weighs 51 tons empty—hauls a 50-ton load with no effort. On Minnesota's iron ranges, costly equipment, vast plants and thousands of miners team up to meet America's ore needs. With fair treatment, the ore industry can continue to meet the nation's needs by developing low-grade and taconite ore production—thus assuring continued benefits for all Minnesota. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.



A Timely Message from "Willie Wiredhand"

Infrared Lamps Used in Brooding To Save More Chicks, Pigs, Lambs

Electric brooding of chicks, pigs and lambs has come in for a good deal of attention recently all over the Upper Midwest as well as all over the country.

Farmers are finding, for instance, that they can brood their chicks a good deal easier by using infrared lamps. The initial cost is low, hovers are not essential, the chicks can be seen without moving any equipment, and the infrared brooder units can be easily stored.

The infrared lamps give off infrared rays, which are a form of radiant energy. These rays, in turn, give off heat without heating the air through which they pass. Thus any object placed in the lamp's rays will be warmed, although the air will retain its original temperature.

It is not necessary to maintain a given temperature in your brooder house. The lamps provide heat for the chicks, and the outer air need not be warmed at all.

You can use the same brooder house you are using now, and you should plan to use one 250-watt lamp for every 60 to 100 chicks. Start with the lamp about 18" from the floor, raising it 1" every week, or 2" every two weeks, but never higher than 24".

If you use a hover, you will find your brooder takes less electric energy, but hovers are not necessary to a good brooding job.

There are two types of infrared lamps — the soft glass type and the hard, or "pyrex" lamp. If you have some sort of protection under your lamps, you can feel free to use the soft glass type, which is cheaper, but if you have no protection, or if the lamps are exposed to splashing water, you should use the hard glass type, which is more resistant to breaking.

Remember that these lamps can be used equally well for pigs and lambs. Many farmers have reported saving several extra pigs per litter.

For additional information about infrared lamps, I'd suggest you contact the utilization director of your local electric cooperative. He'll be glad to help you.

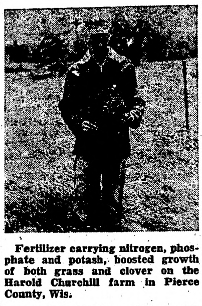
Plant Nutrients Boost Grass, Legume Yields By Two Tons Per Acre

ADDING fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash has increased pasture yields as much as 2 tons per acre, declared Prof. C. J. Chapman, University of Wisconsin extension agronomist, in reporting on the results of pasture demonstrations in the state.

On the Henry Berg farm near Blanchardville, in Lafayette County, pastures fertilized with 10-10-10 showed yields of 8,025 pounds per acre on July 5, 1951, compared with 3,750 pounds on unfertilized fields, an increase of 4,275 pounds.



Fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash, boosted growth of both grass and clover on the Harold Churchill farm in Pierce County, Wis.

When 10-10-10 fertilizer was added to white clover and bluegrass on the Betlach farm near Sun Prairie in Dane County, pasture yields increased by about 1¾ tons per acre. The output was 8,025 pounds per acre on July 2, 1951, on the fertilized fields and 2,300 pounds on the check plots.

The pasture demonstrations are being carried on in cooperation with farmers, county agents, vocational agriculture teachers and organizations in the fertilizer industry.

Notes for Farmers

UMT May Come Up Before Congress Again

The Universal Military fight may have to be repeated before the present Congress adjourns. Congressman Carl Vinson, chairman of the House Atrmed Services Committee has drafter a new UMT bill and House Democratic leaders are at work checking it with individual Congressman to see if it can be passed.

The tentative revised bill would put a 1958 termination date on UMT and forbid it being put into effect while men are being inducted into the Armed Services through Selective Service. Trainees could not be called into active service except by Congress, construction of new camp facilities would be forbidden, the Armed Services would be required to cut down 1 man for every 3 trainees, and training time could be cut to 4 months if agricultural or industrial production was threatened by the UMT withdrawal of manpower.

Seriousness of Vinson's new effort is underlined by the fact that some of the Administration leadership is systematically talking with Democrats who voted against UMT to see if, with the revisions, the new bill can be passed. Efforts will be made if there is a chance of victory by the UMT proponents.

Letter writers need to get busy again. Undoubtedly, letters from the folks back home defeated UMT on the first try this session. If your Congressman had voted against UMT, by all means write him and thank him, and urge him to continue to oppose any doctored bill that may be presented. If he voted wrong, write him and tell him you don't like it. Either way every Congressman needs to know that voters back home are watching their votes.

Minnesota Farmers Use More Fertilizer For Growing Crops

MINNESOTA farmers used approximately 250,660 tons of fertilizer in growing their crops last year, according to a statement by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, based on statistics compiled by the National Fetilizer Association. This was the highest consumption ever recorded in the state and represented an increase of 35,673 tons compared with 1948.

Fertilizer consumption in Minnesota was 19 times as great in 1949 as it was 10 years ago. In 1939, only 13,455 tons of fertilizer were used on Minnesota farms.

For the entire United States the 1949 fertilizer consumption totaled 16,579,000 tons. This was the highest in history and exceeded the 1948 record by 623,000 tons. More than twice as much plant food was used in the United States last year as in 1939, when the total consumption was 7,707,000 tons.

The steadily increasing use of fertilizer on the nation's farms in the past 10 years is attributed to these factors: (1) Fertilizer has proved profitable in boosting crop yields per acre, cutting production costs and increasing net income. (2) Plant food gives a high return for every dollar invested. (3) Fertilizer is a "good buy" for farmers. Prices of fertilizer have remained very reasonable compared with prices of other commodities purchased by farmers and with prices received by farmers for their products.

Soil Building Job Should Be Put On Year-Round Basis

THERE is no "closed season" for applying soil building amounts of commercial fertilizer on the heavier soils, reports the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in citing recent research by Dr. W. A. Albrecht, chairman of the soils department of the University of Missouri, and A. W. Klemme, extension soils specialist.

Soil building amounts of plant food can be added any time machinery can be driven over the fields, according to these soils research men. The fertilizer application need not be timed with crop planting. It can be put on well in advance, whenever the ground is firm and labor is available.

The research men report that on most clay or silt loam soils of Missouri, the clay fraction of the soil has a high capacity for holding fertilizer. Thus very little of any plant food materials will leach down through the soil. This is particularly true if there is some growing crop which will catch the plant nutrients applied in more soluble form.

However, fertilizer in the row is still needed by crops to give them the quick start and sturdy growth needed for top yields.

Soil tests indicate good results from putting mineral nutrients on the soil during the regular operations of preparing the seedbed for the next crop, the agronomists report.

From where I sit... by Joe Marsh

Might As Well "Get In Key"

Last Tuesday Judge Cunningham wanted to go fishing. "Why aren't you working?" I asked.

Judge explained how his wife had gone on a trip, taken his keys by mistake—and now he couldn't get in the office. So we went fishing.

Next day, he wanted me to go again. I was surprised those keys hadn't shown up yet. "The little woman phoned to say she mailed them," the Judge explained. "They're now in the office, under the mail slot. I'd get 'em if I could just open that door." He grinned and picked up his fishing rod.

"Great little woman, the wife. You can always count on her. Let's go!"

From where I sit, we can use tolerance like the Judge shows for his wife's absent-mindedness . . . and she shows for his habit of lighting out for the fishing hole at every opportunity. He can't see why she likes tea, and she doesn't share his taste for a glass of beer. But they get along fine! Learning to respect other people's ways will "open the door" to happier living.

Muskies, Northerns—Beware!

ICE MAY BE on the lakes now, but warm-weather fishermen will soon be casting these shimmering spoons Mrs. Lucjlle Schliske is assembling in St. Paul. In northern Minnesota, where the big fish bite, the iron mining industry, too, is preparing for spring, and a new ore shipping season. Men keep busy all winter—mining ore deep underground—stripping waste material from ore deposits—overhauling and repairing mining equipment. Year-round employment is usual on the ranges today. The iron mining industry can create more year-round employment if it is encouraged to develop all potential raw materials. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

Plant Nutrients Boost Grass, Legume Yields By Two Tons Per Acre

ADDING fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash has increased pasture yields as much as 2 tons per acre, declared Prof. C. J. Chapman, University of Wisconsin extension agronomist, in reporting on the results of pasture demonstrations in the state.

On the Henry Berg farm near Blanchardville, in Lafayette County, pastures fertilized with 10-10-10 showed yields of 8,025 pounds per acre on July 5, 1951, compared with 3,750 pounds on unfertilized fields, an increase of 4,275 pounds.

Fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash, boosted growth of both grass and clover on the Harold Churchill farm in Pierce County, Wis.

When 10-10-10 fertilizer was added to white clover and bluegrass on the Betlach farm near Sun Prairie in Dane County, pasture yields increased by about 1¾ tons per acre. The output was 8,025 pounds per acre on July 2, 1951, on the fertilized fields and 2,300 pounds on the check plots.

The pasture demonstrations are being carried on in cooperation with farmers, county agents, vocational agriculture teachers and organizations in the fertilizer industry.

Fruit Breads Are Fine

WE all know the story of the little boy who prayed for his daily bread—"with butter on it." But it took a grown-up person—and he or she must have been an inspired cook—to imagine the luxury of bread with fruit baked in it. Who was the first one to imagine the tastiness of raisin bread? History does not say, so we cannot erect a monument in his honor. But from his kitchen—or more probably it was her kitchen—came the idea of enriching bread with fruit and thus reaching new heights of luscious flavor.

Modern Fruit Breads

Today, almost every fruit known to the orchard and the garden crops up in muffins, biscuits and rolls as well as in succulent loaves of bread. Thanks to perfect modern oven control and scientifically simple recipes, even the less gifted cook can successfully produce toothsome results. Serve hot fruit breads often. At every meal, not to mention at tea time, they are received with joy. Here are some tested recipes that you will want to clip and paste in your recipe book.

Cranberry Corn Muffins: Beat one egg, add two tablespoons sugar and one cup sour milk, then the following sifted dry ingredients: one cup flour, one cup corn meal, half a teaspoon soda and half a teaspoon salt. Stir in three tablespoons melted butter and half a can canned cranberry sauce, using the thick part, rather than the juice. Bake in buttered muffin tins at 400 degrees for twenty to twenty-five minutes. This makes eight large or twelve small muffins.

Pineapple Prizes

Pineapple Muffins: Sift together two cups flour, three tablespoons sugar, four teaspoons baking powder and half a teaspoon salt. Add two eggs well-beaten and one cup milk. Add three tablespoons melted butter and three-quarters of a cup of crushed pineapple, well drained. Bake in greased muffin tins in a hot oven—400 degrees—for twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Pineapple Nut Bread: Sift together two cups flour, four teaspoons baking powder, one teaspoon salt, and a quarter of a cup of sugar. Beat one egg well, add to it one cup milk, and then add both to the dry ingredients. Add three tablespoons shortening (melted), half a cup of well-drained crushed pineapple and half a cup of nuts. Bake in a greased loaf pan in a moderate oven—350 degrees—for one hour, or till done. This recipe makes a moderate sized loaf.

Cherries and Apricots

Wholewheat Cherry Muffins: Beat one egg and to it add two tablespoons sugar and one cup sour milk. Add the following sifted dry ingredients: one cup flour, one and a half teaspoons baking powder, half a teaspoon soda and half a teaspoon salt, and then add a cup of whole-wheat flour which should never be sifted. Add four tablespoons melted butter and half a cup of drained red pitted cherries cut in pieces. Bake in a hot oven for twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Apricot Biscuits: Sift together two cups flour, four teaspoons baking powder and one teaspoon salt. Mix in three tablespoons shortening. Beat one egg well and blend it well with half a cup of apricot pulp made by draining and pressing canned apricots through a sieve. Then add the apricot syrup and combine the mixture with the dry ingredients as you would milk. Pat or roll out gently and cut in rounds. Bake in a very hot oven—450 degrees—for twelve to fifteen minutes.

Blueberries and Figs

Blueberry Cornsticks: Beat one egg well and add one-fourth cup sugar. Sift together the following dry ingredients: one cup flour, one cup cornmeal, five teaspoons baking powder and three-quarters of a teaspoon of salt. Add these to the first mixture, alternately with one cup of milk. Add two tablespoons melted butter and three-quarters of a cup of drained canned blueberries. Bake in a greased bread-stick pan in a hot—400 degrees—oven for twenty to twenty-five minutes.

Fig and Bran Muffins: Cream three tablespoons butter and one-fourth cup sugar, and add one well-beaten egg. Sift one cup flour, half a teaspoon soda, half a teaspoon salt and one teaspoon baking powder, and mix them with the first mixture, alternately with one cup of sour milk. Add a cup and a quarter of bran and two-thirds of a cup of drained canned figs. Bake in buttered muffin tins in a hot—400 degrees—oven for about twenty minutes. This makes about fourteen or fifteen muffins.*

We have a Reading Honor Roll for third grade. For every good reading lesson, a colored star is placed opposite the pupils name.

In last week's spelling, all the third graders had 100. Eight of the 4th graders had perfect score. This week will decide who the winners will be. The third graders were the winners in the last six-weeks period.

The 3rd graders will soon have completed nine readers. We expect to have a new reader "If I Were Going" to start after Easter vacation. We will have a workbook with this reader.

The 4th grade will use Gopher Tales as a supplementary reader. We have completed five readers.

Room 3

The sixth graders made relief maps of Minnesota and the fifth graders of the United States.

This week we are having six-weeks tests.

Vacuum Cleaner Care

If a vacuum cleaner must pick up pins and threads, its efficiency is bound to go down. When a cleaner has caught up thread and hairs in the brush, take a moment to cut them out. While this is being done, check to see whether the tips of the brush extend just past the tip of the nozzle. They should if the cleaner is to do a first-class cleaning job.

LOUISA'S LETTERS

Dear Louisa:

I am a girl sixteen years old and am so mixed up. I am a senior and am finishing this June.

I started dating a soldier—a nice young man who stands well and my people like him a lot and he is prepared to make a good living.

I led him on to believe I loved him and I accepted his diamond—a beautiful one — and now he wants me to wait a year until he is established in his job when he gets back. I want to get married right away after he gets back this June. He loves me dearly but sometimes I am doubtful of my love for him. Please tell me what to do.

C.

Answer:

You are very young and I am afraid you are in love with love rather than with any particular young man.

However, as you have accepted his ring, I think his suggestion that you wait a year is a very good one for both of you. It may be that when he returns, he will have developed into a grown up and you may not be as attractive to him as he now thinks you are.

Certainly, getting married right away will not solve your problem if, you are not sure that you love him. tI is much better to face an issue such as that when you are engaged rather than after you are married. The year of grace will give both of you time to really decide what is best for you to do.

Louisa

Dear Louisa:

My cousin and I both of whom are in the late twenties are planning a trip to Seattle this summer to see some relatives. A young man—a friends of ours—would like to go along and share expenses with us as he is interested in a young lady there. My mother sees nothing wrong with our going but she is afraid people will talk. So we decided to get your opinion. What do you think about it?

B. L.

Answer:

I see nothing wrong about it—in fact I think it will be a protection for you and your cousin to have this young man with you on such a long trip.

It would be a different matter if only one of you girls were going and the man was in love with you.

Louisa

Corrections

In election of board officers at the Livestock meeting, the one director was supposed to be Alfred Setten and not Severt Setten.

The item of Martin Borsvold passing away at Larimore, N. D He had managed the Old Christiana Hotel there in Larimore. not in Strandquist, as there is no such a hotel here in Strandquist and Martin Borsvold has never lived here.

Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Andersen heard from their son, Ardis and family from Ponca City, Oklahoma where he has accepted a job as chemist for Continental Oil Co., the same company he was employed by in Lake Charles, Louisiana.

A Gradual Process

Little Betty, like most other children never wanted to go to bed. One evening she was naughty and as punishment her mother placed her in a chair in one corner of the room.

"And don't you dare get down till you are good," said the vexed parent.

After a while mother said: "Betty it is time for you to go to bed."

The child shook her head. "Oh, no, mummy!" she said, I'm not good enough yet."

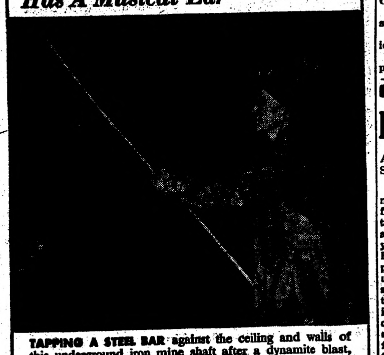
Has A Musical Ear



TAPPING A STEEL BAR against the ceiling and walls of this underground iron mine shaft after a dynamite blast, Gust Saari of Soudan, Minn., judges from the ringing tones if the ore overhead is loose or solid. A miner for 36 years, Saari has a well-developed sense of hearing—a big asset in this specialized task. Unusual jobs like this, requiring able, competent men, are found all over Minnesota's iron ranges — costly equipment and vast plants are useless without human know-how. The ore industry hopes to create more year-round employment for more Minnesotans by developing low-grade and taconite ore production. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

Notes for Farmers

Act Fast to Help Save Our Farm Programs

Quick messages to Congress are needed to help save our federal farm programs from destruction through unwise budget cuts. Probably only a telegram will reach your Congressman before the House votes on the USDA Appropriations bill. Such wires are urgently needed. The House is slashing appropriations deeply after only briefest discussion. Nothing will help to get full and serious consideration of proposed slashes better than word from the folks back home. Get off a wire to your Congressman opposing deep and paralyzing cuts of farm programs and agencies. Then write your Senators to oppose them when Agricultural Approriations are up in the Senate. Farmers have fought 20 years for programs now in jeopardy!

Not So Solemn

New York — Becoming suspicious, police slipped quietly into an upper East Side funeral chapel and arrested 36 men—thirty-five of whom allegedly were playing dice alongside a candle-decked altar, while the thirty-sixth was the owner, Anthony Piragnoli, 63 who got $25 a night for the use of his chapel as a place for gambling.

Slip - Up

The best man at the wedding had never met the bride until he was introduced to her at the reception.

"I hardly feel like a stranger," he said to her. "You see, when we were overseas together, John couldn't resist reading out extracts from his darling Betty's letters."

"Really," said the bride, icily, "my name happens to be Joan."

April, May Dangerous Months With Tractors

If you're a farm tractor operator, you don't need anyone to read the stars to tell you that April and May could be fateful months in your life this year.

Figures cited by Glenn Prickett, extension farm safety specialist at the University of Minnesota, show that in 1951 more than 40 per cent of the year's farm tractor fatalities happened during these two months.

Death struck a total of 37 times last year as the result of tractor accidents in Minnesota, with 6 of these fatalities, in April and 9 in May. The toll dropped to one in June. A total of 19 persons died from tractor accidents which occurred during May, 1949, 1950, and 1951, combined.

The safety specialist called for greater caution in operating tractors this spring. Be especially careful, he urged, about getting stuck, tipping, speeding. Drive carefully on the highway and use lights at night. Be wary in approaching highways from fields, driveways and side roads. Keep small youngsters away from tractors. Don't allow extra riders. In 1949 and 1950, 25 per cent of the tractor fatalities were youngsters 14 years and under, and half of these were under 4.

Prickett urged farmers to see that inexperienced tractor operators get thorough training in safe methods.

Minnesota's Place in America Today

Editor's Note — The following essay was written by Mary Ann Polansky, a senior in the Middle River High School, for which Mary Ann received an honorable mention in the local contest sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary.

Minnesota has played an important part in United States, especially during World Wars, when the nation needed the iron from her great iron mines. This state has more iron than any other state in the Union.

Minnesota can be proud of her schools and all the people that make use of them. Minnesota state has the largest permanent educational state fund in the United States. This fund was started not by selling outright the school sections, but by leasing timber, agricultural and mineral rights on these sections. Only the interest of the fund is used. The early legislators in Minnesota were wiser than those of any other state. Other states hold the school sections outright for small sums of money. No wonder our rich University ranks third highest in United States.

Minnesota people have the four freedoms, freedom from want on our farms, the people raise the food not only for themselves but, other states. Our forests give work to men in winter time, our mines, lakes and harbor, give work during the summer, fall and spring. This land of "Ten Thousand Lakes" gives recreation and living for many people.

• • •

Our state has freedom from fear-except for a possible war time enemy bombing the railroads or mines. There are no dictators to hold us down. Our state does not have any serious race problems such as is found in some other states of the Union.

Our state has freedom of religion. Little and big churches of every denomination are here; people are free to worship or stay at home. No dictator except our conscience controls us.

• • •

Our state has freedom of press and speech. We can write anything truthful in our newspaper with out having a dictator stop us. We can print truthful advertising posters of any kind without having fear. We can speak the truth in public to other people or over the radio. Freedom of speech gives us the freedom to tell the truth without fear.

Because we practice all these freedoms in Minnesota, we believe that this state is the best of the forty-eight states of the United States.

Minnesota can be proud of her democratic government and the governors that have helped make it that way. One governor from Minnesota, Stassen, is running for president on the Republican ticket. His record as a Republican governor promises, he should be able to handle a bigger job, that of president of the United States. Senator Humphrey, a Democratic senator from Minnesota has thrown his hat in the Democratic presidential ring. The Minnesota congressmen and orators, impress people all over America.

The state of Minnesota is typical of the best in America. She is rich in resources which are used for protection and building of the whole forty-eight states. She has people of many nationalities who have learned to work and cooperate. She has practiced the four freedoms. This state has native sons and daughters who have been trained to be good political leaders here and could serve the nations in bigger jobs.

Because of her resources, her cooperative people, her schools, her practices of the four freedoms, and her native sons are political leaders, Minnesota has played a big part in America and promises to continue making America great.

Plant Food Can Help Farmers Meet Call For More Grain

THE call for bigger grain crops in 1952 emphasizes the need for farmers to order fertilizer supplies early, declared the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee, in a recent statement.

"Stocks of grain are reported shrinking in proportion to the number of farm animals to be fed," says the statement.

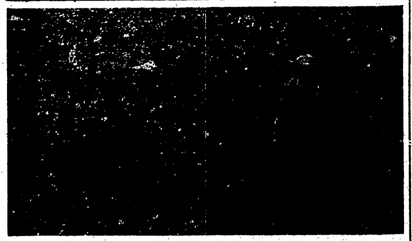
"Livestock feeders will need more grain to provide for increasing numbers of cattle. Farmers will be asked to boost feed production."

Agronomists report that yields of corn and small grain can be increased 50 to 100 per cent above the state averages in most areas by good soil management methods including the use of fertilizer.

These agronomists recommend using 300 to 400 pounds of fertilizer carrying nitrogen, phosphate and potash at seeding time in the fall and then top-dressing with nitrogen the following spring. Adding a full feed of plant food is important where legume-grass seedings are to be made in the wheat.

Promptness in ordering fertilizer is particularly vital now in view of the raw materials situation. Shortages of superphosphate have already developed.

Wornout Pastures Can be Revived to Thrifty Paying Growth by Fall Renovation Program



Rough, cloddy, cut-up sod (left) prevents soil and water loss in winter. Renovated, fertilized pasture (right) gives thick, lush growth.

YOU can put new life in old, run-down pastures by a good renovation program this fall, says the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee. Reinforced by liming and the use of commercial fertilizer, such a program can build wornout fields into profitable milk and meat producing pasture.

A soil test taken this fall will give you a line on the plant nutrients needed for the new seeding.

Killing out the old pasture growth is the first step in the renovation job. On heavy sods, agronomists recommend using a weighted disc to cut the sod into chunks. Digging the field with a field cultivator is the second step.

Leave the field rough and full of clods over the winter. This will cut down erosion and prevent loss of soil and water even on the steepest slopes. The clods will act as baffles for melting snow or rains during winter or spring.

In the spring, go in with a cultivator, break up the clods and make a smooth seedbed.

Seeding the nurse crop and putting on the fertilizer is the next order of business. The agronomists point out that a cultipacker seeder is a good method of seeding small legumes. A firm seed bed and a good coverage of legumes can make a vast difference in the stands.

The agronomists recommend adding 400 pounds or more of fertilizer per acre at the time of seeding. The phosphate and potash will provide nutrients for fast spring growth and the development of thick legume roots and leafy topgrowth.

"Spoiling Children"

Although many parents feel that they will "spoil" their children by responding to the slightest wail, an infant under four months or so needs so much close contact with his mother that his demands for handling or rocking should never be brushed aside. A sick baby, or one who has been hard to nourish properly, needs all the satisfaction and comfort possible.

Cattle Egret

The cattle egret, unlike the rest of the heron family, does not live on water creatures. It catches insects disturbed by the feet of grazing livestock. Well known to parts of Africa and South America, it was first recorded in Australia by the National Geographic Society-Smithsonian Institution Arnhem land expedition in 1948.

Easy way to BOOST FLAX YIELDS!

Each extra dollar spent for treating seed Flax can bring you an extra $200 next fall!

Because of weather damage suffered at harvest time much of this spring's seed flax is unusually susceptible to soil borne diseases. University of Minnesota reports 40% emergence from untreated seed, 78% from treated seed.

Protect your yields by treating seed Flax with New Improved Ceresan, Ceresan M, or Panogen at least 48 hours before planting. It means better, healthier stands, higher yields. It's your cheapest crop insurance!

FLAX Shortage Predicted!

The government reports farmers are planning to put in only 3,985,000 acres of Flax this spring. With average (1940-49) yields, this would leave the nation more than 5 million bushels short of its goal.

This is a serious matter. For the past 2 years, the U.S. also failed to grow as much as it used... and supplies of this vital crop are the lowest in years.

Yes, Flax will be a much needed crop by fall... and a profitable crop for YOU!

In the months ahead the Red Cross-Great Northern car shown above will play a stirring role in the lives of hundreds of communities throughout the railway's territory. Dedicated to the procurement of life-saving blood for the nation's Armed Forces, the unique car is a self-sustaining "blood center on rails," with reception lounge, donor room and canteen area adequate to accommodate 120 donors per day.

FARE: ONE PINT OF BLOOD

As a public service, Great Northern Railway has provided the American National Red Cross a special car for collection of blood for our country's Armed Forces.

The Red Cross-Great Northern blood procurement car, named in memory of Private First Class Richard Vincent Whalen, first employe of the railway to give his life in Korea, was put into service on April 2 for as long as America's fighting men need life-saving blood.

The Richard Vincent Whalen has been provided and will be operated by Great Northern without cost to the Red Cross, which will staff the "blood center on rails" in its extensive tour of communities throughout the railway's territory.

Operation of the car will give thousands of citizens their first opportunity to give blood for the Armed Forces, and will be directed and supervised only by the Red Cross. Although the Red Cross plans to utilize the car throughout Great Northern's 8300-mile system, first operations will be in Minnesota and the Dakotas.

Pfc. Richard Vincent Whalen

A Great Northern maintenance-of-way employe before his enlistment in the Army, Private Whalen lost his life in Korea in 1950. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent I. Whalen of Florence, Minn., who were first blood donors on the car named for the young soldier.

The Red Cross has advised Great Northern that the blood procurement car cannot be scheduled for every city and town on the railway. Delivery of blood to processing laboratories in the shortest possible time after collection is vital to its utilization by the Armed Forces, so the Red Cross will operate the procurement car only where connections can be made daily with Great Northern trains to speed the refrigerated whole blood to laboratories in the East.

The Red Cross will work through its local chapters in mobilization of donors and enlistment of voluntary services of physicians and other personnel. Your home town newspaper, always a dependable ally of the Red Cross, will do its part in achieving the most effective use of the Richard Vincent Whalen. And, so will Great Northern people wherever the Red Cross sends the car.

Eight times more blood is needed than now is being received by the Red Cross. Blood means life to the Armed Forces, and the Red Cross-Great Northern car is dedicated to increasing the flow of it to fighting Americans.

Fare on the Richard Vincent Whalen is one pint of your blood.

Farm Economists Call Fertilizer 'Cheapest Crop Production Item'

FERTILIZERS are still the "cheapest crop producer per dollar invested" among various production items the farmer buys, according to a recent statement by Michigan farm economists.

These specialists point out that efficient, high crop production per acre is the key to maintaining farm profits and keeping costs low. Fertilizer use is an essential factor in such a program.

A recent statement in Michigan Farm Economics, published by Michigan State College's department of agricultural economics, lists these steps for building efficient production per acre: (1) A good crop rotation that improves soil tilth and increases the organic matter supply; (2) Keeping output costs low by buying production items that are relatively cheap. Fertilizer is still the cheapest crop producer per dollar invested; (3) Putting the emphasis on cash crops that use more machinery and less hand labor.

R. Mailbox Improvement Wk.

The Post Office Department has designated April 27 to May 3 as Rural Mailbox Improvement Week. In continuation of the valuable work in prevous seasons to repair or improve the rural mailboxes of the nation, a vigorous campaign will be launched again this spring.

Here are a few pointers:

See that the posts are securely erected and that the box is fastened securly.

Replace obsolete box if it is hard to get mail into it, or if it is hard to see into it for letters that you want mailed.

Name should be painted on side of box which carrier approaches.

It is a big help if several boxes are neatly placed on a plank extending between two posts.

Bottom of box should be 42 inches above roadway and should be on an arm extending out away from the post, in such a manner that it can be easily reached.

Fill ruts with crushed rock or broken brick or cement

Your carrier serves this box 305 days every year. If it is correctly set, it lightens his work and saves time so that he can more quickly serve other patrons along his route.

Your mailbox is the front door to your home.

Since it is usually in front of your home, its neat appearance will add considerably to the neat appearance of your home. Ruts filled - box and post painted white - possibly a few flowers planted behind it.

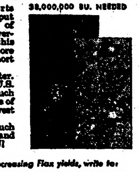
Although many parents feel that they will "spoil" their children by responding to the slightest wail, an infant under four months or so needs so much close contact with his mother that his demands for handling or rocking should never be brushed aside. A sick baby, or one who has been hard to nourish properly, needs all the satisfaction and comfort possible.

Cattle Egret

The cattle egret, unlike the rest of the heron family, does not live on water creatures. It catches insects disturbed by the feet of grazing livestock. Well known to parts of Africa and South America, it was first recorded in Australia by the National Geographic Society-Smithsonian Institution Arnhem land expedition in 1948.



Easy way to BOOST FLAX YIELDS!

Each extra dollar spent for treating seed Flax can bring you an extra $200 next fall!

Because of weather damage suffered at harvest time much of this spring's seed flax is unusually susceptible to soil borne diseases. University of Minnesota reports 40% emergence from untreated seed, 78% from treated seed.

Protect your yields by treating seed Flax with New Improved Ceresan, Ceresan M, or Panogen at least 48 hours before planting. It means better, healthier stands, higher yields. It's your cheapest crop insurance!

FLAX Shortage Predicted!

The government reports farmers are planning to put in only 3,935,000 acres of Flax this spring. With average (1940-49) yields, this would leave the nation more than 5 million bushels short of its goal.

This is a serious matter. For the past 2 years, the U.S. also failed to grow as much as it used ... and supplies of this vital crop are the lowest in years.

Yes, Flax will be a much needed crop by fall ... and a profitable crop for YOU!

HOLT MERC. CO.

In the months ahead the Red Cross-Great Northern car shown above will play a stirring role in the lives of hundreds of communities throughout the railway's territory. Dedicated to the procurement of life-saving blood for the nation's Armed Forces, the unique car is a self-sustaining "blood center on rails," with reception lounge, donor room and canteen area adequate to accommodate 120 donors per day.

FARE: ONE PINT OF BLOOD

As a public service, Great Northern Railway has provided the American National Red Cross a special car for collection of blood for our country's Armed Forces.

The Red Cross-Great Northern blood procurement car, named in memory of Private First Class Richard Vincent Whalen, first employe of the railway to give his life in Korea, was put into service on April 2 for as long as America's fighting men need life-saving blood.

The Richard Vincent Whalen has been provided and will be operated by Great Northern without cost to the Red Cross, which will staff the "blood center on rails" in its extensive tour of communities throughout the railway's territory.

Operation of the car will give thousands of citizens their first opportunity to give blood for the Armed Forces, and will be directed and supervised only by the Red Cross. Although the Red Cross plans to utilize the car throughout Great Northern's 8300-mile system, first operations will be in Minnesota and the Dakotas.

Pfc. Richard Vincent Whalen

A Great Northern maintenance-of-way employe before his enlistment in the Army, Private Whalen lost his life in Korea in 1950. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent I. Whalen of Florence, Minn., who were first blood donors on the car named for the young soldier.

The Red Cross has advised Great Northern that the blood procurement car cannot be scheduled for every city and town on the railway. Delivery of blood to processing laboratories in the shortest possible time after collection is vital to its utilization by the Armed Forces, so the Red Cross will operate the procurement car only where connections can be made daily with Great Northern trains to speed the refrigerated whole blood to laboratories in the East.

The Red Cross will work through its local chapters in mobilization of donors and enlistment of voluntary services of physicians and other personnel. Your home town newspaper, always a dependable ally of the Red Cross, will do its part in achieving the most effective use of the Richard Vincent Whalen. And, so will Great Northern people wherever the Red Cross sends the car.

Eight times more blood is needed than now is being received by the Red Cross. Blood means life to the Armed Forces, and the Red Cross-Great Northern car is dedicated to increasing the flow of it to fighting Americans.

Fare on the Richard Vincent Whalen is one pint of your blood.

Farm Economists Call Fertilizer 'Cheapest Crop Production Item'

FERTILIZERS are still the "cheapest crop producer per dollar invested" among various production items the farmer buys, according to a recent statement by Michigan farm economists.

These specialists point out that efficient, high crop production per acre is the key to maintaining farm profits and keeping costs low. Fertilizer use is an essential factor in such a program.

A recent statement in Michigan Farm Economics, published by Michigan State College's department of agricultural economics, lists these steps for building efficient production per acre: (1) A good crop rotation that improves soil tilth and increases the organic matter supply; (2) Keeping output costs low by buying production items that are relatively cheap. Fertilizer is still the cheapest crop producer per dollar invested; (3) Putting the emphasis on cash crops that use more machinery and less hand labor.

DON'T fly kites near electric power lines. Never use metal on kites. Don't climb poles.

R. Mailbox Improvement Wk.

The Post Office Department has designated April 27 to May 3 as Rural Mailbox Improvement Week. In continuation of the valuable work in prevous seasons to repair or improve the rural mailboxes of the nation, a vigorous campaign will be launched again this spring.

Here are a few pointers:

See that the posts are securely erected and that the box is fastened securly.

Replace obsolete box if it is hard to get mail into it, or if it is hard to see into it for letters that you want mailed.

Name should be painted on side of box which carrier approaches.

It is a big help if several boxes are neatly placed on a plank extending between two posts.

Bottom of box should be 42 inches above roadway and should be on an arm extending out away from the post, in such a manner that it can be easily reached.

Fill ruts with crushed rock or broken brick or cement

Your carrier serves this box 305 days every year. If it is correctly set, it lightens his work and saves time so that he can more quickly serve other patrons along his route.

Your mailbox is the front door to your home.

Since it is usually in front of your home, its neat appearance will add considerably to the neat appearance of your home. Ruts filled - box and post painted white - possibly a few flowers planted behind it.

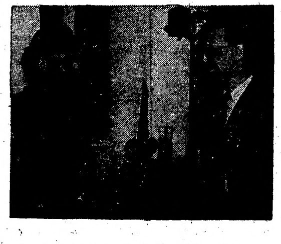
ELBOW LAKE, MINN. . . .

SHEEP SHEARING TIME AT THE FLINTS

Just about everything you can name is electric on the farm of Guy Flint and his son, Charles, near Elbow Lake, Minnesota. And when it comes sheep shearing, that's done with electricity too. It's easy to see why: Recently 473 spring lambs were sheered in 16 hours, using two electric clipper units. By hand it would have taken about 77 hours! The Flints are early-day Otter Tail customers, farm around 1,000 acres, sometimes "feed out" as many as 5,000 sheep at a time.

DAWSON, MINN. . . .

HANSEN, GIVENS and SOYBEANS



When farmers and businessmen get together, things happen—especially in Dawson, Minnesota! Result: A soybean processing plant with a capacity of 250,000 bushels a year, operated by the Tri-County Cooperative Soybean Association. Here Carl Hansen, the president, displays the unprocessed soybeans—as Joe Givens, plant manager, shows him the finished products . . . . a sample of soybean oil and a sample of soybean meal. The new plant opened in December, will run 24 hours a day, 6 days a week, the year around.

Radiator Reckoning

To figure how much enamel you will need for re-coating a radiator, multiply its height by its width, then multiply by seven. This will give you the area to be covered. Your dealer can thus advise you the quantity of coating material you will need.

Annual Fire Toll

Each year approximately 11,000 people are killed by fire or die from burns received in fires. More than 2,000 of the fatalities are children under five years of age.

Heart Beats

A mouse's heart beats 600 times a minute; he dies in two or three years. The elephant's heart has 28 beats to the minute; he lives 70 or 100 years. The great athletes have slow hearts, 45 to 50 beats to the minute.

Clear Water Absorbed

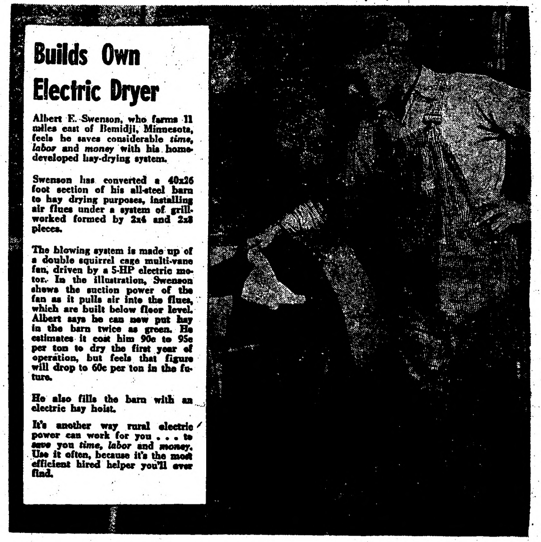
Clear water seeps into the ground 10 times faster than muddy water. Keeping the ground covered with crop residue or cover crops helps clear water soak into soil instead of muddy water running off land.

Poultry Houses

Insulating poultry houses for prevent wet litter. Without insulation, moisture may condense on the sides and ceiling of the poultry house and drop the water to the litter like rain.

Assuring "Clean Sweep"

A weekly bath for the broom will insure a clean sweep and give months of additional life to the broom. The broom should be dipped up and down in hot soapy water and then in a clear water rinse.



Builds Own Electric Dryer

Albert E. Swenson, who farms 11 miles east of Bemidji, Minnesota, feels he saves considerable time, labor and money with his home-developed hay-drying system.

Swenson has converted a 40x26 foot section of his all-steel barn to hay drying purposes, installing air flues under a system of grill-worked formed by 2x4 and 2x8 pieces.

The blowing system is made up of a double squirrel cage multi-vane fan, driven by a 5-HP electric motor. In the illustration, Swenson shows the suction power of the fan as it pulls air into the flues, which are built below floor level. Albert says he can now put hay in the barn twice as green. He estimates it cost him 90c to 95c per ton to dry the first year of operation, but feels that figure will drop to 60c per ton in the future.

He also fills the barn with an electric hay hoist.

It's another way rural electric power can work for you . . . to save you time, labor and money. Use it often, because it's the most efficient hired helper you'll ever find.

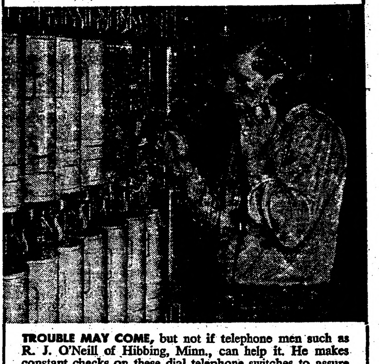
An Ear For Trouble



TROUBLE MAY COME, but not if telephone men such as R. J. O'Neill of Hibbing, Minn., can help it. He makes constant checks on these dial telephone switches to assure continuing good service. On a vastly larger scale, Minnesota's iron mining industry seeks to prevent another kind of trouble—ore depletion—by finding new ways to assure a continuing supply of Minnesota iron ore. Over 50 plants are now engaged in treating low-grade ores to extend the life of the high grades. And with fair tax treatment on all grades of ore, the ore industry can take the next step—processing iron-bearing taconite rock. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

Sources of Uranium

The rich pitchblende deposits of the Belgian Congo and Canada's Great Bear Lake region, which supplied experimental materials for the first atom bomb, are still considered the world's outstanding uranium sources. Czechoslovakia's pitchblende from the Jachymov mines is often mentioned, along with the newly important carnotite ores of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico, and Arizona, and the extensive but uranium-light titanium of Arkansas.

Painted Floors

To keep the glossy finish on painted floors, walls, and woodwork, substitute a little powdered glue for soap the next time they are washed.

Field-Cured Alfalfa

The best field-cured alfalfa does not provide vitamin D to poultry as it does to larger farm animals; the most reliable sources of vitamin D for birds are sunshine and fish oils.

Hill Farms

The legume birdfoot trefoil, appears to be the best answer to the hill farmers' problems, according to a Cornell agronomist. It will help get poor soil in production, increase pasture yields and reduce the need for buying high amounts of protein feed.

Underground Rivers

In Mexico there are underground rivers with man-made steps leading down to them.

RURAL MAIL BOX IMPROVEMENT WEEK SET

Rural Route Patrons Requested to Fix Mail Boxes in Accordance With Rules.

The post office department has designated the week ending May 3, 1952 as "Rural Mail Box Improvement Week".

Rural mail boxes which are not properly erected or which are not in good serviceable condition retard the delivery of mail and expose it to damage from the elements, state officials of the Department.

"The Postal Bulletin", official newspaper of the Post Office Department further adds:

"It is the desire of the Department to encourage patrons of the rural delivery service to provide suitable mail receptacles and to erect them in such manner that they will be readily accessible to the carrier and present a neat appearance.

"It is especially desireable that the boxes be maintained in a condition that will assure proper protection to mail placed therein, that the names of box owners be inscribed on the side of the boxes visible to the carrier as he approaches them, and that the boxes and their supports be kept painted. Patrons who have unapproved boxes of top-opening, revolving door or other type are not required to discard them provided the boxes have been in use by the present owners for several years and are maintained in good, serviceable condition. Any boxes not of the present standard type which are of such design that they cannot be properly served by the carrier from his vehicle or are in such condition as not to protect the mail, should be replaced with boxes of the approved types. Boxes regardless of the type, should, of course, be of such design and such condition that there will be no likelihood of the carrier's being injured when serving them".

NEWFOLDEN SENIORS TO PRESENT PLAY

The Newfolden senior class is putting final touches on its class play "Gangway For Ghosts" which will be presented on Wednesday evening, April 30th at 8 p.m. in the high school auditorium.

Some people like to laugh, others like to cry, still others prefer their entertainment highly flavored with romance. But everybody likes a good mystery plan and "Gangway For Ghosts," besides being an exceptionally novel mystery, combines all the other ingredients as well.

* * * *

Following is a list of the students and their parts: JoAnn Donarski plays the part of Minnie Brill, the housekeeper; Winton Forsberg is cast as the butler, Peters; Carol Nelson is Sally King who wants to be a detective; Elwood Sollom is Sally's shadow, Mr. String Beane; Joan Dahlberg portrays Hester Storm who owns Storm Heights; Dorothy Gustafson is Gayla Grande, an actress; Janet McNamara is in the part of Posy May Purdy, Gayla's colored maid; Eloise Windahl plays Crazy Nell, a demented woman who roams the hills; Dale Davidson is Hal Charteris, a playwright; Delano Sackett is Eli Gandy, the sheriff; Wayne Peters has the part of an ex-convict, Ned Jorlan; Edith Lindquist is a woman of mystery. Yvonne Holmos is student director and Evelyn Blinsmon is stage director. Mrs. Tunheim is directing the production.

* * * *

The tickes are fifty cents and can be procured from any Newfolden high school senior. Buying a ticket in advance assures you of a good seat in the center section which is being reserved for the holders of tickets bought before the evening of the performance. Admission tickets, of course, will also be sold at the door.

* * * *

The curtain rises promptly at 8 p.m. so be sure to be in your seats a few minutes early for you won't want to miss the "scary" opening of this thrilling, suspense-filled play "Gangway For Ghosts."

Mrs. Wm. Stienhauer, Mrs. Oscar Gutterud, Mrs. Edwin Anderson, Mrs. Art Moe and Mrs. Clifford Larson were luncheon guests at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Loyd Hagenson last Thursday the occasion was the latters birthday.

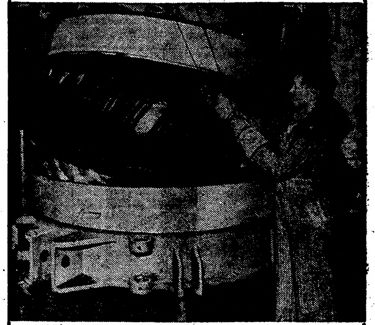
Need A Spare Tire?



HIGH AS A MAN'S HEAD, this giant tire being hoisted from a re-capping mold by Walter Brennan of Grand Rapids, Minn., would hardly fit your family car. But truck tires like this are in constant use in Minnesota's iron mines —re-capping them to increase their useful life has become a specialized business in the Range country. Iron mining is responsible for the growth of hundreds of such independent businesses which employ thousands of Minnesotans in non-mining jobs. In fact, every 1,000 miners really account for the support of some 7,000 other Minnesotans. And the ore industry's value to the state can become even greater if it can be treated like any other Minnesota industry.

Now You Know

It was late when the daughter of the house came down to her wih a smile.

"Darling," she said, "you were awfully late coming in last nite. I'm afraid I'm dreadfully old-fashioned, but I should like to know where you go."

The daughter smiled. "Certainly I'll tell you Mummy," she replied "I dined with —oh, well you don't know him anyway; and then we went to several places that I don't suppose you've been to: and we finnished up at a queer little club — I forget its name. It,s all right, isn't, it Mummy?"

"Of course it is, darling. It,s only that I like to know."

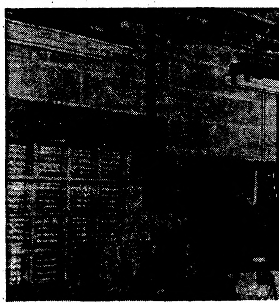
Proper Lighting Is Important To Income, Health of Farmers

By IRA MILLER
Farm Electrification Bureau

Remember when electricity first came to your farm? If you were like most farmers, the first thing you did was to turn on the light in the front room. It seemed wonderful—and it was. But later, electric light took a back seat on many farms. The novelty wore off as farmers began applying electricity to various chores in the home and on the production front.



LIGHT ON HIS WORK—fluorescents light this farm shop "section" of storage shed.

The same pattern is being repeated as additional farms "come on the line" across the nation. One of the major jobs of farm electric systems—the ability to provide electric light—is being neglected. It's time to recapture that first rural electrification thrill. And to follow through in putting light—enough of it in the right places—to work.

A well-lighted home is easier to keep clean, and provides a cheerier atmosphere for the whole family. Children do home work easier; there's no straining to read books and papers; mending chores go faster, when the family works and plays in adequately illuminated areas which are free from annoying shadows.

Good light, too, plays an important part in the farmer's income. Emergency repair jobs and some chores, which must be done at night, can't be done well unless the farmer can see what he's doing. A dimly-lit milk house is the best guarantee for poor quality milk—for light is needed to determine whether utensils are clean and other handling operations meet "Grade A" standards.

Lighted farm yards help to prevent accidents and speed up travel between farm buildings. All building entrances should be well-illuminated, and interior lighting arrangements planned for maximum effectiveness. Dairy barns, for example, should have both litter and feed alleys illuminated, while beef cattle barns require lights over feed troughs and additional general illumination to help farmers handle various choring jobs efficiently. Each installed machine in a farm shop should be well-lighted. Special attention is recommended for lighting haymows, with lights placed so they will not interfere with hay handling operations, and planned to provide adequate illumination for chutes, stairways and ladders. Some localities require dust-tight lights for such locations. Conventional type silos should have a light at the top of the chute.

It is recommended that lights be installed so that they can be controlled conveniently from various locations on the farmstead. This can be done with multiple-control switches or by means of low-voltage relay control systems.

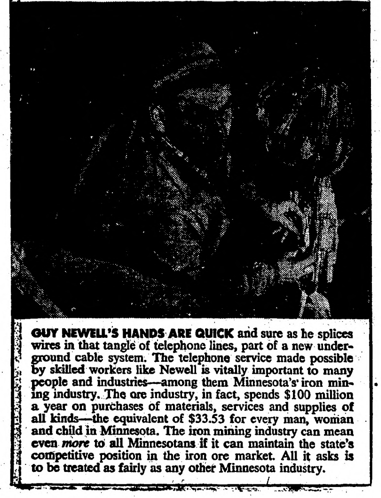
Workroom In A Manhole



GUY NEWELL'S HANDS ARE QUICK and sure as he splices wires in that tangle of telephone lines, part of a new underground cable system. The telephone service made possible by skilled workers like Newell is vitally important to many people and industries—among them Minnesota's iron mining industry. The ore industry, in fact, spends $100 million a year on purchases of materials, services and supplies of all kinds—the equivalent of $33.53 for every man, woman and child in Minnesota. The iron mining industry can mean even more to all Minnesotans if it can maintain the state's competitive position in the iron ore market. All it asks is to be treated as fairly as any other Minnesota industry.

When we took the black paper from around our jar our ants are in, we found they had been very busy tunneling. They seem to take rest periods when all of them rest below the ground. When they work, they are all busy indeed.

We had 4 snails in our fish bowl but only one stayed. We watch his poky trips around the bowl and over the shells at the bottom.

Last week was too hot for us. Maybe that's why there were only 6 100s in Friday's spelling tests. They were earned by Orvis L., Conley D., Mark C., Barbara A., Carol H., and James D. A few good spellers missed because of illness.

Lorna M. and Orvis L. had 100 in Weekly Reader test.

Room 2

The 4th grade geography class is studying Erik and Inger in Norway. In connection with the study, Janice Engen brought many pictures of Norwegian scenery and people to show us. She also showed some crocheted and knitted articles made there.

New items added to our science study are minnows, snails, ants, shells, stones and magnets.

The English classes wrote letters to Karen Carlson who has been absent due to illness.

Room 3

We have been reviewing the states and capitals in fifth grade geography.

In science we have learned about physical and chemical changes and their importance to us.

On Friday we made free hand water-color drawings.

Most of us have been doing wood-work this week.

Room 4

We have set the date - Monday evening, May 26th for our Eighth Grade Commencement Exercises at the schoolhouse.

Marilyn Clarice Moe will give the Valedictory Address and Wayne Allen Wegge the Salutatory Address.

Use Headlights in Fog Says Highway Dept.

The practice followed by some motorists of using only parking lights when driving in heavy fog was scored today by the Minnesota Highway Department. Acting on a suggestion from the American Legion Post of Wood Lake, the Department pointed out that the "use of parking lights alone offers little protection since they are not ordinarily strong enough to be seen a safe distance under adverse conditions of visibility. Experienced drivers realize this and use their bright lights with the depressed beams."

Conditions of heavy fog require the utmost care and reduction of speeds to avoid running off the road or colliding with other vehicles. Following too close behind other cars is also extremely dangerous under such conditions, the Department stated.

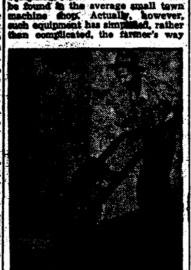
Mechanization Helps Farmers Do Chores Easier and Faster

By IRA MILLER
Farm Electrification Bureau

Farming operations look pretty complicated these days. Many farms have more motors and electrical equipment scattered around than can be found in the average small town machine shop. Actually, however, such equipment has simplified, rather than complicated, the farmer's way of life. It has taken over numerous chores formerly performed by manual labor.



CART MADE FROM ODDS AND ENDS—to transport large motor around farm.

Nearly every electrified farm has two or more portable motors on hand to operate various "choring machinery." Motors of from ¼ to ½ horsepower operate such equipment as cream separators, fanning mills, drill presses, emery wheels and small corn shellers, circular saws and feed mixers. Those of from 1 to 3 horsepower operate corn elevators, hoists, pumps, etc., and larger motors—5 to 7½ hp.—run ensilage cutters, crop driers and many other devices.

Motors, which are not an integral part of electric equipment, can be moved from job to job without difficulty. Handles for small motors may be made of two strands of heavy wire, twisted together at the top and covered with a section of rubber hose. The wire is attached to the two top frame bolts of the motor. Larger motors are transported by carts. Usually, a cart can be built from odds and ends of discarded farm equipment, for instance—handles from a walking plow, wheels from tongue trucks of a horsedrawn disc and the frame from 2-inch bar iron.

Electric power has taken over much of the lifting, loading and moving jobs around scores of modern farms. Elevators, operated by motors of from 2 to 5 hp. are used to fill silos and to move grain and hay into storage bins and mows. Baled hay, elevated to the mow door, can be moved to any desirable position by horizontal conveyors and re-elevated by inclined plane elevators. These handy elevators are easily wheeled around the granary or other buildings to load wagons or to shift produce from place to place.

One Ohio farmer built a 120-foot long, enclosed conveyor to move grain from the granary to his steer feeding barn. It operates with a 2 hp. motor. Another form of "feed mover" is the silo unloader. Located in the top of conventional silos or built into specially designed, commercial structures, they scrape silage into the chute where it drops into feed carts.

And these are only a few of the motor-operated devices on farms today. In fact, it would be hard to visualize an electrified farm whose operator hasn't put motors to use in one way or another to do his chores easier, faster and more economically.

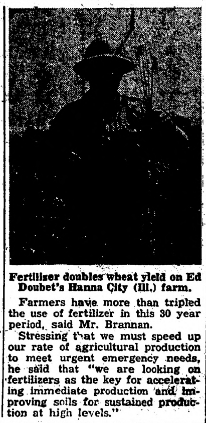
Build Bigger Crop Yields for Defense Program By Using More Plant Food, Brannan Urges

SECRETARY of Agriculture Brannan's recent statement that fertilizer is one of the most vital tools for boosting crop production to meet America's emergency food and fiber needs, was cited by the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee as a reason why farmers should give plant food a top listing in any soil management program.

Mr. Brannan pointed out that the threatening international situation and our own mobilization program have created a new and sudden demand for a greatly increased farm output. This new demand, he said, comes at a time when farm production is already at a high level and virtually every acre is under production.

The application of increased quantities of fertilizer, he said, "is the farming practice which provides one of the biggest opportunities for increasing all agricultural production in behalf of the defense efforts."

"Although the total acreage of cropland was not increased significantly during the past 30 years," he added, "farmers found several ways of increasing production to keep pace with our growing population. Mainly this was done through mechanization, improved crop varieties, better pest control, fertilization and improved cultural practices."



Fertilizer doubles wheat yield on Ed Doubet's Hanna City (Ill.) farm.

Farmers have more than tripled the use of fertilizer in this 30 year period, said Mr. Brannan.

Stressing that we must speed up our rate of agricultural production to meet urgent emergency needs, he said that "we are looking on fertilizers as the key for accelerating immediate production and improving soils for sustained production at high levels."

A Timely Message from "Willie Wiredhand"

Modern Farmers Developing New Uses for Electricity Every Day

It's amazing to see just how much electricity is doing for the modern farmer these days!

There are new uses being put into operation every day. For instance, just recently I learned something about using electricity to operate hotbeds, making it easier than ever to start seedlings. A thermostat is used to regulate the heat.

This spring farmers all over America were saving extra pigs, chicks and lambs by using infrared heat lamps. They have helped countless farmers solve brooding problems.

A turkey raiser in the east used electricity to save time grading and candling turkey eggs.

And in Virginia one congregation decided it was easier to pull a toggle switch than to struggle with a rope, so they now ring their church bell with electricity.

These are some unusual uses for electricity. But they show how versatile electricity can be. There are extra jobs on your farm which you could do easier with electrcity. You would save time too — time you could profitably spend in other activities.

These are just three of the many benefits of electricity. It makes hard jobs so easy — it saves you so much time — and you'll find that electricity does almost any job you ask it to do — and does it more efficiently than you ever did it before.

So give electricity extra jobs on your farm. You'll never do them the old way again.

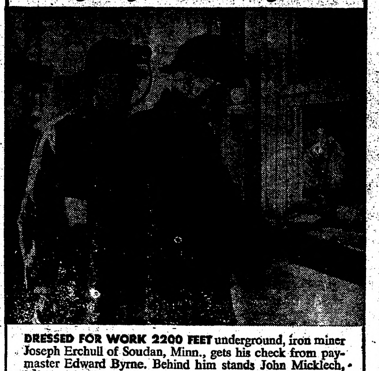
Everybody Likes a Pay Line



DRESSED FOR WORK 2200 FEET underground, iron miner Joseph Erchull of Soudan, Minn., gets his check from paymaster Edward Byrne. Behind him stands John Micklech, followed by Ray Syrjanen. Erchull, who has mined ore for 46 years, has stepped up to the pay window more than 1100 times—receiving money which has benefited many Minnesotans. For iron miners, with $50 million a year in ore pay, are big purchasers of Minnesota-made products. The iron mining industry and the families of its employees can be even larger customers if the normal development of all grades of Minnesota ores is assured. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

John Albert Olson was born on June 20. 1888 at Holt. On March 17, 1923, he married Miss Ellen Rustad. His wife survives, together with the following children: Mrs. Orris Johnson, Thief River Falls; Clayton Olson, Holt and Norman Olson, a prisoner of war in Korea. Spring Top Dressing Ups Pasture Yields TOPDRESSING permanent pastures this spring with a balanced plant food will get your dairy cows out of the barn earlier, stretch the grazing season, give you bigger yields, and cut your feed bills.

Prof. C. J. Chapman, University of Wisconsin extension soils specialist, recommends adding 10-10-10 at the rate of 500 to 600 pounds per acre in early spring.

Chapman says that fertilized forage often contains from 18 to 22 per cent protein. In addition, this early pasture is rich in minerals and vitamins need for a well rounded ration.

The fertilizer can be added as soon as the snow is gone, even on top of frozen ground. But it is usually necessary to wait until April to get out on the fields with truck, tractor and spreader. In many areas, the plant food can be applied as late as May 1.

The city slicker halted his car at a desolate crossroads and yelled to a farmer driving a load of hay: "Hey, Cornsilk, is this the way to Chicago?"

University — It probably will cost someone with a bump of scientific curiosity a maximum of $300,000 to find out if there is life on Mars. When the money and Prof. Jean Piccard get together he hopes to harness some 80 helium balloons to a 7-foot aluminum gondola and soar 100,000 feet—19miles—into the oxygen-free stratosphere. Mrs. Piccard would navigate while he manipulates 2½ tons of research equipment and reads a Mars spectroscope to determine whether or not oxygen is present in the atmosphere of that mysterious distant planet. "Jean and Jeanette" already have been up 57,000 feet.

Who, Me? Nervous?

Lietuentant Baily, youthful air force pilot had just landed his fighter after a mission north of the Thirty-eighth Parallel and went in to report to his commanding officer.

"Were you nervous during the attack?" inquired the C.O.

"Who Me?" asked Bailey. "No sir, I was cool as a cucumber through the whole show."

"Swell," replied the C. O. "I just thought you might have been a little jittery when you radioed that 15,000 enemy jets were coming at eight feet."

Mendota — Every day but Monday every month but dead-of-winter, Sibley Tea House flavors delightful modern cuisine with vibrant Minnesota history. Within walking distance of this 1854 hostelry, east of the south end of mile long Mendota bridge, a rich vein of history crops out. Prehistoric Indian signals flamed from Pilot Knob. Minnehaha's laughing waters mingle with the Missouri and the Minnesota at Pike Island, where in 1805 the young lieutenant negotiated the Fort Snelling treaty. Here in 1858 began St. Peter's, one of the state's oldest Catholic churches. Here in 1820 settled fur-trader Jean Baptiste Faribault. Here in 1835 General Henry H. Sibley built the house that housed Minnesota's first territorial capitol and later our first governor. Across the Minnesota rise Snelling's ancient Block House and 1820 Round Tower. Here Minnesota DAR and Mr. and Mrs. Bjarne Olsen, Sibley Tea House hosts, now graciously carry on the tradition of frontier hospitality so appropriate to this shrine of Minnesota history.

A Real Surprise

A famous author was autographing copies of his new novel in a large department store. One gentleman pleased him by bringing not only his new book for signature, but reprint editions of the author's two previous works as well.

"My wife likes your stuff," he remarked rather apologetically, "so I thought I'd give her these signed copies for a birthday present."

"A surprise, eh?" hazarded the author.

"Ill say," agreed the customer. "She's expecting a mink coat."

Do you think it will improve his behavior?" inquired Papa.

"No," answered Mama grimly, "but it might spread his meanness over a larger area."

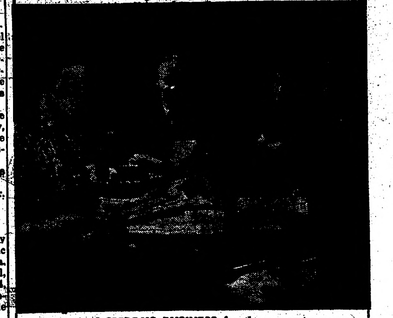
School Days For Parents



SCHOOL IS SERIOUS BUSINESS for these parents, members of a PTA group presided over by Mrs. George Lind of Long Lake, Minn. More grown-ups are going to school these days, learning about their children's classroom work, their school conditions and problems. One fact all parents should know—how Minnesota's iron mining industry helps ease their own tax load and improve their schools. Over $161 million of Minnesota's $205 million school trust funds came from ore taxes and royalties on iron ore. $6.75 of the $9.00 per pupil apportionment aid received by your school last year was made possible by iron ore. The ore industry can continue to assure benefits like this to all Minnesota if it is treated as fairly as any other industry in the state.

Keep Corn Plant's 'Pipe Lines' Open To Get High Yields

KEEP the corn plant's pipe line system open, if you want to get high yields per acre this year.

You can do this by making sure the soil furnishes the crop with a well-balanced supply of the three major plant nutrients—nitrogen, phosphate and potash.

Each corn plant has from 1 to 1½ miles of interior tubes or pipe lines, according to Dr. George N. Hoffer, Midwest manager of the American Potash Institute. These tubes carry nitrogen, phosphate, potash, calcium and magnesium from the root tips up to the leaves Here the nutrients are manufactured into starches, sugars and proteins. Other tubes carry these foods back to the roots and through the ear shanks for developing kernels.

The joints or nodes in a cornplant are distribution centers where all the pipe lines are interwined into a mesh work of smaller tubes. Surrounding this mesh work are special tissues which regulate the workings of the pipe lines.

When the soil's plant nutrient supply is out of balance—particularly if potash is lacking—the tubes in the joint tissues in the base of the corn plant get clogged. Then the roots starve, the stalks become weakened and infected and the plants lodge. When tubes in the ear nodes fail to work, kernels cannot be filled. Ears do not mature.

Tissue tests on many Midwestern farms last summer showed that corn plants with defective pipe lines were starving for potash. Joint tissues were swollen, discolored and disorganized due to accumulations of iron and other metals.

Healthy plants with efficiently operating pipe lines had plenty of potash. Potash keeps the joint tissues active in producing protective enzymes that protect the inner health of the corn plants.

When all the plant nutrients are in well balanced supply you will get thrifty, high producing corn crops.

Topdressing Alfalfa After First Cutting Holds Thicker Stands

YOU can add extra life to alfalfa stands and keep thick pasture growth in late summer and fall by top-dressing after the first cutting with phosphate and potash fertilizer, points out the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

The alfalfa plants will push out new growth faster. Roots will have a better chance to store up reserves of high energy starches and sugars. The soil will benefit from large amounts of active organic matter that help build tilth and structure.

Agronomists report that well fertilized legumes can make fuller use of soil moisture and of the carbon, oxygen and other nutrients taken from the air. Their taproots can probe deeper into the earth, carrying phosphate and potash from the surface on down to the moist soil zone below.

When well-fed legumes are turned under, they rot quickly to form humus, because they are packed with nutrients which feed the soil organisms which break down organic matter. The humus improves soil structure and releases plant nutrients to feed crops that follow in the rotation.

Agronomists emphasize that second crop alfalfa should be given a chance to establish a strong new top growth before it is pastured or cut for hay. These specialists recommend that fields should not be pastured after early September. This will enable the alfalfa plants to pack their roots with plant food reserves to carry them safely over the winter and spur healthy, early growth the following spring.

Giant Building

The merchandise Mart, a giant among the world's buildings of commerce, covers two full city blocks on the busy water front in Chicago. Inside this huge structure, there are 93 acres of offices and stores.

Must Learn to See

A child learns to see just as he learns to swim, and unless he develops the proper coordination of the eyes and the muscles and nerves used in seeing he is likely to have trouble in school.

Fluorescent Lamps

Fluorescent lamps are superior to incandescent lamps in many ways—they give off less heat, more light, and last from two to three times as long unless turned on and off frequently.

Start All Over

When paint-and-varnish remover have been used on a surface to remove the old coating entirely, the surface must then be cleaned thoroughly with turpentine, mineral spirits or wax-remover and subsequently treated as a previously uncoated surface.

Drive Carefully Memorial Day

This year's long Memorial Day weekend presents a definite challenge to the driving skill and ability of motorists, according to A. V. Rohweder, president of the Minnesota Safety Council.

"Marshall County motorists can make a very substantial contribution to the holiday safety record" said Mr. Rohweder, "by adjusting their driving to meet this challenge as they go about their holiday travel on the crowded rural highways."

Rohweder made three suggestions for safer holiday driving:

1. Always be courteous in your driving.
2. Refrain from drinking while driving, or driving after drinking
3. Observe warning signs, no-passing zones, and all traffic signals, especially on hills and curves.

Elimination of holiday traffic deaths and injuries, he said, depends on each individual motorist. Realisation of this basic fact by every driver will mean a death-free Memorial day week end.

Holt 4-H Club News

The good grooming and princess contest was held in Newfoldon on Monday evening. The following from Holt took part in the good grooming contest: Marlene Larson, Leon Horien and Carole Wegge. LaRue Fricker represented our club in the princess contest. About 85 boys and girls of Marshall County took part. LaRue won second place in her group and will compete in Dairy Show at Thief River Falls June 10. All the contestants did well and were a good representation from our club.

We had a good attendance at church for 4H Sunday. The inspirational message by Rev. Brandt will be long remembered by our young folks. The entire 4H group sang "My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

Horien-Skoglund Wedding

Nazareth Lutheran Church was the scene of a pretty wedding, Sunday afternoon May 4th at 3:00 o'clock when Arlene Verna Horien, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Horien became the bride of Wilbert Duane Skoglund son of Mr. and Mrs. Manning Skoglund of Argyle. Rev. Raymond Brandt officiated at the double ring ceremony.

Candlebras of tall, white lighted candles and baskets of lilacs, palms and cut flowers furnished the setting for the ceremony.

Nuptial music was played by Mrs. Henry Nohre. Mrs. Raymond Brandt sang "I Love You Truly" and "O, Perfect Love". Both were gowned in pink and green taffeta.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a gown of white nylon marquisette over slipper satin, fashioned with fitted bodice buttoning down the back, a sweetheart neckline trimmed with French lace, and long sleeves coming to a point over the hand. The full skirt extended into a long train. Her fingertip veil was held with a coronet of pearls was also worn by her sister, Mrs. Clifford Root of Moorhead. She carried a bouquet of red and white roses and lilies-of-the-valley from which hung white ribbons tied in love knots. The legendary gear something old, new, borrowed and blue was also worn.

Mrs. Clifford Root attended her sister as matron of honor wearing a lavender taffeta gown and Miss Lucille Skoglund of Argyle, sister of the groom as bridesmaid, attired in a yellow gown of net over taffeta. They carried colonial bouquets of roses and carnations with streamers. Their ensembles were complemented with pearl necklaces, gift from the bride.

Linda Nyval was flower girl, dressed as a miniature bride, wore a white satin gown, and carried a colonial bouquet of roses and white carnations and strewed rosepetals down the white carpeted aisle in the path of the bride.

Gary Gunstenson was ring bearer, wearing a white suit. He carried the rings on a white satin pillow with streamers and bows.

Attending the groom as best man was the bride's brother-in-law Clifford Root. Emery Horien brother of the bride, was the other attendant. Ushers were Gene Hanson, brother-in-law of the groom and Fred Seaberg, uncle of the bride. All men attendants wore navy blue suits and white bouteniers.

The bride's mother wore a tan crepe dress with white accessories and wore a corsage of pink and white roses. The groom's mother wore a navy dress with white accessories and wore a corsage of pink and white roses.

After the ceremony, a reception was held in the church parlors. Gracing the table was a three tier wedding cake topped with a miniature bride and groom also tall candles and flowers. Mrs Emmanuel Andeen of Minneapolis, aunt of the groom, poured and Mrs. Fred Seaberg, aunt of the bride, cut the cake. Gloria Johnson had charge of the guest book. Norma Horien and LaRue Fricker were waitresses. Mrs. Waldemar Wendt. Mrs. Robert Nyval and Mrs. Adolph Stienhauer had charge of the reception.

The newlyweds left on a trip to North Shore Drive after which they will make their home near Argyle where the groom is farming. For traveling the bride chose a navy blue suit with navy accessories and an orchid.

A NEW VISIONLINED MM "Z-LINE"

Four completely different front wheel models

ZAS: fixed wheel tread model usually called the "Standard". Has both front and rear wheels in a single wide position that gives extra stability. Used for all field operations not requiring row crop cultivation or fertilization. Front wheel tread 48 inches —rear wheel tread 54 inches.

ZAU: MM "Universal" or row crop tread model has front wheels mounted on the pedestal and employs the MM sector type steering gear famous for easy handling. Front wheel tread may be extended from 7¾ inches to 12⅞ inches by reversing the wheels. The rear wheels are adjustable on the splined axle from 54 to 88 inches.

ZAE: with the same general appearance as the standard model but instead of the fixed front wheels it has a telescoping front axle that allows the wheels to be extended from 56 to 84 inches at 4 inch intervals. Rear wheels adjustable to any position from 54 to 88 inches on splined rear axles. This provides complete flexibility for spanning narrow rows or vegetable crops.

ZAN: A single front wheel or tricycle tread adapts this model to narrow row spacing used for beets and similar crops. Rear wheels are adjustable from 54 to 88 inches to fit the ZAN to any row with minimum time and effort.

Keep Corn Plant's 'Pipe Lines' Open To Get High Yields

KEEP the corn plant's pipe line system open, if you want to get high yields per acre this year.

You can do this by making sure the soil furnishes the crop with a well-balanced supply of the three major plant nutrients — nitrogen, phosphate and potash.

Each corn plant has from 1 to 1½ miles of interior tubes or pipe lines, according to Dr. George N. Hoffer, Midwest manager of the American Potash Institute. These tubes carry nitrogen, phosphate, potash, calcium and magnesium from the root tips up to the leaves Here the nutrients are manufactured into starches, sugars and proteins. Other tubes carry these foods back to the roots and through the ear shanks for developing kernels.

The joints or nodes in a corn plant are distribution centers where all the pipe lines are interwined into a mesh work of smaller tubes. Surrounding this mesh work are special tissues which regulate the workings of the pipe lines.

When the soil's plant nutrient supply is out of balance—particularly if potash is lacking—the tubes in the joint tissues in the base of the corn plant get clogged. Then the roots starve, the stalks become weakened and infected and the plants lodge. When tubes in the ear nodes fail to work, kernels cannot be filled. Ears do not mature.

Tissue tests on many Midwestern farms last summer showed that corn plants with defective pipe lines were starving for potash. Joint tissues were swollen, discolored and disorganized due to accumulations of iron and other metals.

Healthy plants with efficiently operating pipe lines had plenty of potash. Potash keeps the joint tissues active in producing protective enzymes that protect the inner health of the corn plants.

When all the plant nutrients are in well balanced supply you will get thrifty, high producing corn crops.

Topdressing Alfalfa After First Cutting Holds Thicker Stands

YOU can add extra life to alfalfa stands and keep thick pasture growth in late summer and fall by top-dressing after the first cutting with phosphate and potash fertilizer, points out the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

The alfalfa plants will push out new growth faster. Roots will have a better chance to store up reserves of high energy starches and sugars. The soil will benefit from large amounts of active organic matter that help build tilth and structure.

Agronomists report that well fertilized legumes can make fuller use of soil moisture and of the carbon, oxygen and other nutrients taken from the air. Their taproots can probe deeper into the earth, carrying phosphate and potash from the surface on down to the moist soil zone below.

When well-fed legumes are turned under, they rot quickly to form humus, because they are packed with nutrients which feed the soil organisms which break down organic matter. The humus improves soil structure and releases plant nutrients to feed crops that follow in the rotation.

Agronomists emphasize that second crop alfalfa should be given a chance to establish a strong new top growth before it is pastured or cut for hay. These specialists recommend that fields should not be pastured after early September. [illegible] enable the alfalfa plants to [illegible] their roots with plant food re- [illegible] them safely over [illegible] healthy, early [illegible]

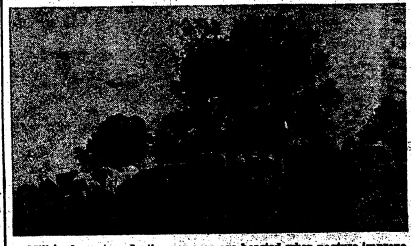
Teamwork of Lime and Fertilizer Builds Pasture, Ups Legume-Grass Yields 5-Fold



Milk and meat production per acre are boosted when pasture improvement program is based on a high soil fertility level.

NO ONE pasture program is tailor-made for every farm. But any good pasture program must be based on a high level of soil fertility.

That was the statement by Dr. D. R. Dodd, Ohio State University extension agronomist, in summarizing the results of a pasture survey of 28 states, sponsored by the University and the Middle West Soil Improvement Committee.

"The best pasture," he said, "is the one that best suits the particular situation and makes the farmer the most money."

Typical of how Midwestern farmers are building profits and improving soil fertility via the grassland route, is the experience of Clarence Kaiser, Eckerty, Ind., according to Dr. Dodd. When Kaiser first limed and fertilized, he got 5 times more legumes and grass than formerly. Now he adds 200 to 300 pounds per acre of 0-20-20 yearly to all his sod land. He has kept 5 fields of Ladino clover and grass in high production for 5 to 10 years through his yearly fertilizer treatment and grazing management. Kaiser and his son are making a good living on 78 acres.

Hay yields of 3 tons per acre, 70 to 80 bushels of corn and 60 to 70 bushels of oats are being produced on Walter Virtue's farm near Hanover, Ill., through a grassland improvement program. This includes using 150 pounds per acre of 3-12-12 at corn planting time and about 150 pounds of superphosphate in the grain seeding in which new meadow is being established.

Thirty-five acres are yielding more income than most 150-acre farms for W. M. Cornwall, Franklin, Ky. He uses 500 to 1,000 pounds of fertilizer per acre annually. He is producing 10,000 pounds of milk a month on intensively fertilized pasture that formerly was wornout land.

Drills With Diamonds

IRON RANGE DRILLER Voit Savolainen of Nashwauk, Minn., pounds casing into an exploratory hole in a new mining area before drilling deeper with a $1500 diamond-studded core drill. The cores, or rock samples, will be examined by geologists for their ore content. This exploration work is just one of many winter jobs on the iron ranges. Other men have been busy mining ore deep underground—stripping waste material from ore deposits—overhauling mining equipment. This year-round work, usual in the ore industry today, assures steady incomes for thousands of ore miners—means benefits for all Minnesota. A fair deal for Minnesota's iron mining industry means a good deal for you.

Middle River Publisher To Print Holt News

A deal was completed this week with Harold Nelson, editor and publisher of the Middle River Record whereby he became owner of the subscription list of the Holt Weekly News. Mr. Nelson's paper is serving eastern Marshall county and the news and advertising from Holt will be ably taken care of by the efficient staff there. The Record has modern equipment and specializes in job printing.

This merger will be a boost to the business places of Holt. The good paper they publish and the individual attention Mr. Nelson gives to each village he serves bring results.

It is with sadness that we have to bow to the inevitable and close down the Holt Weekly News printing plant which has been in business 41 years. The direct cause of quitting is the suspension of Ready Print service by Western Newspaper Union which had supplied us with that service all these years.

For the past 25 years the paper has been "in the family". Joys and sorrows have been recorded as history unfolded itself in Holt. By the way, do you know that a copy of each issue of the Holt Weekly News since its beginning is filed with the Minnesota Historical Society in St. Paul?

To the many who were faithful subscribers these many years all I can say is thank you. You had faith in Holt, and made it possible for us to stay in business To those who supported the paper through advertising - thanks from us and the entire community. Prosperity will lap over into the future for you for your faithfulness in the past to your community.

The money we take with us as we leave this business is not much but the very pleasant association we have had with Holt people, we take with us for the rest of our lives.

The following helped Margie Larson celebrate her 10th birthday on Sunday: Leora Osse, Donald and Mrs. B. Brazier of Middle River, Duane Kurtz of Jamestown. N. D., Thomas, Levi, Bobby and Alvin Osse of Skime, Arlene McCullough, Mr. and Mrs. Loyd Larson and boys, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Gusa and girls, Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Sandberg and girls.

P. B. Malberg, aged 94, a Marshall county resident since 1881, a former county official and a leader in county political and civic affairs for more than half a century, died at his farm home in Excel township May 14.

Born in Red Wing on Feb. 24, 1868, Peter Bennet Malberg grew to manhood in Goodhue county where his parents moved in 1861 to homestead. The Malberg family still has an interest in the original homestead in that county. In 1881 he came to Marshall county to homestead on the land which he continued to own until his death. He was one of the first settlers in Excel township.

His first public office was that of assessor. He was elected clerk of district court for Marshall county in 1894 and served until 1898. In 1904 he was elected Marshall county auditor and served in that office until 1908. 1910 to 1914 he was county commissioner from the 5th district.

The community here extends sympathy to Mrs. A. W. Carlson who received the sad news Friday that her father, Adolph Herseth, 62, had passed away in his sleep at his home in Bertha. Mrs. Herseth was convalesing at the Carlson home after being a patient at a hospital in Thief River Falls for two months following a car accident. Funeral services were conducted Tuesday at Bertha.

Mr. and Mrs. Ed Furr visited at the Art Conklin home Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Lubitz and family visited at the M. Augustine home Wednesday evening.

The Last Roundup

Several Holt people have planned to board the train on Saturdry and ride up to Warroad and back on the passenger train's last run on this line Hartley Peterson has contacted the officials of the Great Norttern as well as officials up and down the line and it should be a gala affair. (How about some entertainment, Hartley, such as the "Gay Nineties" stuff)?

Legion Convention Planned for June 6-7-8

Planning committees are rushing to completion final arrangements for the ninth district convention of the American Legion to be held in Thief River Falls on June 6-7-8.

A. C. Tiedeman, Thief River Falls convention general chairman, announced activities will get underway Friday morning with registration of delegates from 72 posts throughout the district.

The Canton Show for this area will be held June 5th in Thief River Falls in the city parking lot across from the bus depot, announce officials in charge of the livestock exhibition.

Judging of livestock will begin at 19 a.m. and the judging contest is open to all agriculture classes and 4H clubs.

Any farmer who wishes to exhibit Brown Swiss cattle are invited to.

At noon the breeders will have a potluck picnic dinner.

The public is invited to the Brown Swiss Canton Show, and anyone desiring further information should contact Mr. and Mrs. Arne Rantanen.

Memorial Day

We cannot but halt a moment, as we cross the threshhold of the beautiful month of May, in silent honor of those who gave their all that we might prosper. Their day comes in May. A single day out of a year, yet more hearts and minds and love will surrender on Memorial Day than any other day of the year.

The torn hearts of mothers, who lost their boys on the battlefields of the wars, will rest easier as the Almighty casts his reflection over the world on Memorial Day. The graves of these boys will again feel the tears of the loved ones left behind.

No honor is too great for those who laid down their lives in the wars of our nation since its birth. No flowers are beautiful enough to grace the graves of our "Soldiers".

It is our prayer that Memorial Day this year, will serve to tender the resting places of our great, and ease many heavy hearts.

Not Practical

Arithmetic is a science of truth said the professor earnestly. "Figures can't lie. For instance, if one man can build a house in 12 days, 12 men can build it in one."

"Yes," interrupted a quick-brained student. "Then 288 will build it in one hour, 17,280 in one minute, and 1,036,800 in one second. And I don't believe they could lay one brick in that time."

While the professor was still gasping, the smart "ready reckoner" went on; "Again, if one ship can cross the Atlantic in six days, six ships can cross it in one day. I don't believe that either; so where is the truth in arithmetic?"

Pull type mowers have their advantages. Fully-mounted mowers have other advantages. But with the Dearborn Rear-Attached Mower you get advantages commonly found in both types.

For instance, like all mounted mowers this one turns with the tractor, instead of behind the tractor. This gives you sharp corners, easy maneuverability anywhere.

While this is an "attached" mower, it can really be attached to the Ford Tractor in only 5 minutes. Detaching is even faster. This lets you switch from mowing to other jobs in a hurry.

LETTERS

Hanley Falls, Minn.

Dear Editor:

Thanks much for the paper which you sent me. You can send me that same kind of news . . . I like it so well. Enclosed is my subscription.

I wonder if you know Henry Peterson? He lived in Gatzke with his parents for a long time many years ago. He attended more schools and is in Singapore, China. He had been here one summer in 1929 when he sold books, and then went back to schol at Litchfield. I know him very well. He has many brothers and sisters, Genevieve Bernard and Alma. That's all I know of. Genevieve had been staying on a farm with her parents, but I have not even seen them since. I think her parents are both dead. Do you know any of them? Please let me hear from you.

I live alone on a farm of my own . . . a very nice place . . . my dad died on November 3, 1950 from heart attack. He would have been 94 years old on November 17th.

I was glad to get the Middle River Record and enjoyed reading it very much.

Please send more names of Henry's brothers and sisters if they still live in Gatzke.

Sincerely,
Miss Mamie Glaim,
Hanley Falls, Minnesota.

(Editor's Note—If anyone has the information Miss Glaim desires, we request that you write directly to her.)

"Never mind the names," he said impatiently, just give me the number."

His tone aroused the mother's indignation, "They haven't got numbers," she said sharply, "they all got names.

All-New Rural Electric Summer Show Starts Tour Next Week

You'll be happy to learn that an all-new Rural Electric SUMMER Show is starting its tour this coming week. It plays its first date at Kelliher, Minnesota, in the Beltrami Electric Cooperative area.

It's a grand new show . . . patterned somewhat after the Rural Electric Show you saw last winter, but with an entirely new and different program planned. Nothing is the same . . . all is new!

There will be welding clinics, running water demonstrations, a Dakota Maid cooking clinic with Alma Oehler in charge, a complete electric power tool exhibit, a completely new Frank Rose "Electric Magic" show, and farm production exhibits, including hay drying, grain drying and other equipment. Of course there is plenty of fun and frolic, too!

Most of the time the show will appear as part of "Rural Electric Day," with many additional features planned by local civic organizations.

Prizes will be awarded, including the grand prize—a $2,500 complete farm work shop! Other major appliances will also be given away, plus "Jackpot Prizes" at every show. There is no obligation . . . all you do is register.

The new Rural Electric Summer Show will visit 48 towns in all, throughout the area served by Minnkota Power Cooperative and its 10 member rural electric cooperatives. Watch your local newspapers for dates it will play near you. Don't miss it!

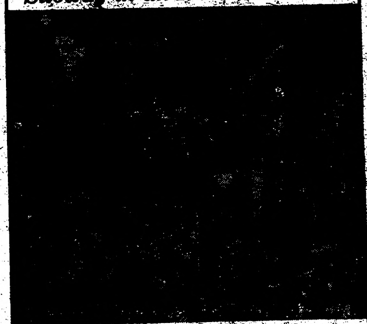
Subway in an Iron Mine



FAR BELOW THE EARTH'S SURFACE, Harold Poylio of Soudan, Minn., drives this underground ore train through narrow iron mine tunnels—hauling ore from the working area to a shaft where it can be hoisted to the surface. A railway system like this is one reason why underground mining is three times as costly as open-pit operations. The mining companies carry on this expensive job, along with extensive treatment of low-grade ores, to make the most of the remaining supply—a conservation program which promises a bright future for Minnesota's ore resources. But, Minnesota's iron mining industry must meet the competition of foreign ores. It can only do so if it is treated as fairly as any other Minnesota industry.

The American Way...

Minnesota is famous for its excellent fishing. More than 1,250,000 people fish Minnesota's lakes each year. And the real fisherman, after a pleasant day's fishing, enjoys a beverage for which Minnesota is famous—a glass of sparkling, Minnesota-brewed beer.
Beer belongs in our picture of pleasant living . . . good fellowship . . . sensible moderation. And our right to enjoy it belongs to our American heritage of personal freedom.

Taxes paid by Otter Tail for 1951 were increased 31% over 1950 .. enough money to have built 77 miles of 115,000 volt transmission line at today's cost of $8,600 per mile.

Otter Tail's total tax bill for 1951 was $2,773,000 ... equal to a year's supply of groceries at an average cost of $1200 per family for every home in a town of 7,500 population.

The Federal government received $1,427,000 of Otter Tail's total tax payments. Property and other taxes amounting to $1,346,000 were paid to schools, towns, townships, county and state governments in North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota.

If, for instance, your electric bill is around $5.25 per month, local, state and national governments get $1.10 of that amount. In 1951, $1.05 of every $5.00 received by Otter Tail for its services, was paid out in taxes.
